

Old Ties, New Hopes

I first wrote to you two years ago, in the form of a 'Publisher's Page' on the first anniversary of CHIP- the magazine that we all had grown to love.

That first anniversary was a moment of great meaning for us. The success of CHIP within those first twelve months had validated much of what we held to be dear- focus on product excellence and customer service. This is what I have believed in the thirty-two years since I started my first magazine.

I am writing again to you after two years only because we stand on the edge of something very important.

Our change from CHIP to Digit.

It may be argued that since the team, editorial structure, content, periodicity, price and package all remain the same, then there is really no difference between this new magazine and CHIP.

While this perspective may not be true in its totality, this transition still remains a very important one for us. This is because we have always believed that our true strength lies not in the marketing of any international brand, but in the true, intrinsic product qualities that we ourselves build.

This belief is what gives us the courage to attempt this change.

Most of our confidence stems from your confidence in us.

At this unique moment in our young company's history, I hope and trust that you will give us the same encouragement and strength that you always have.

Looking forward to having you on this journey!
