

A World of your own

Bangalore got a chance to see cutting edge technology at work when Planet Digit landed at Koramangala Indoor Stadium on the 14th of July 2001. An otherwise routine Saturday was transformed into a mega event for technology lovers of India's equivalent of Silicon Valley as the country's first Technology Content Zone attracted all of them with its force field.

Planet Digit was aimed at bringing technology closer to people through a combination of Tech Tracks, Technology pavilions, and an entertainment zone. Each of these was conceived to give visitors a close look at the latest happenings in the technology arena. Tech Tracks provided insights into various aspects of technology like mobile computing, .Net, security and learning, coming straight from tech gurus from industry giants like IBM, Microsoft and Apple. Live Technology pavilions were built around themes like Processor Power, The Future is Mobile, Advanced Digital Imaging. Visitors got their first looks at cool portable computing devices, futuristic input devices and interactive kiosks.

Techies who needed to freak out got their share of laughs from the Fun Zone, which had the Gaming Zone for game aficionados, and the Hungama zone for really serious freaking out. Yup, the Hungama zone came with a DJ presenting live music for the masses. Interactive quizzes were a major hit and budding singers got a chance to perform live at the karaoke-style singing competition.

Needless to say, this was one of the really popular areas of Planet Digit. As the time came for the day-long event to wind down more than 10,000 people had been through the gates. Come closing time at 7:00 p.m. and people were still coming in,

▲ A bird's eye view of the Technology Pavilions which were amongst the many attractions for visitors to Planet Digit clamoring for "20 minutes more", or "just a quick look at it". The reception desk had a hard time convincing folks that like all good things, Planet Digit had also come to an end.

What's next?

Phase 2 and 3 of Planet Digit at Delhi on the 21st and Mumbai on the 28th of July! Catch that news in the next issue of Digit.

▼ People queue up to gain access to Planet Digit from up to an hour before the 11:00 a.m. scheduled start