

Double Standards

Hi Karan,
I was shocked to read the article '10 Crimes you may have committed' in your January issue. I think the article is a clear case of double standards at Digit. Most of what you have described as crimes (like illegal downloading, CD ripping) are topics on which you have yourself published articles educating your readers.

SHANTANU ADHICARY

Via e-mail

ILLUSTRATIONS: Mahes Benkar

digit

Dear Shantanu,
Double standards at Digit? We think not.

That particular article highlighted what the law has to say on these subjects. What that article is meant to do is show that thanks to archaic laws, almost anything that you do on your computer can be considered illegal...

Three cheers for Linux!

Dear Karan,
I was a bit disappointed with your editorial in the January 2002 issue. Being just 15 years old, I have far less experience than anyone in the Digit team, but I have been using Linux for over four years and I am a die-hard Linux lover.

When you refer to the constant need command prompt mode, you are forgetting the simplicity of using the excellent X Windows System, which comes bundled with almost all Linux distributions today. Also you haven't considered the fact that there are thousands of programs that come along with the Linux CD. For a magazine like Digit, which is considered by novices and experts as their monthly morsel of computing food, it is unjust to project Linux as a user-unfriendly operating system.

VIVEK SAXENA

Via e-mail

digit

Dear Vivek,
Like I mentioned in the editorial, while Linux has made great strides in usability over the last couple of years it still isn't close to the level of user friendliness that Microsoft has managed to achieve with Windows XP.

A long time Linux user like yourself would be familiar with the fact that despite the progress made by KDE and Gnome, the command line is still the most convenient (and in some cases the only) way to get things done in Linux.

Also, few of the applications that come bundled with the Linux distributions match up to their Windows counterparts in either feature sets or ease-of-use.

Short Bytes

Ask Away

Dear Sir,
While I am a reader of Digit, I'm not a subscriber of your magazine. I need some advice on buying a CD writer. Is the Smart Buyer's Forum on your Web site meant only for your subscribers, or can I also ask my questions there?

S. JATANIA

Via e-mail

Dear Jatania,
The Smart Buyer's Forum at thinkdigit.com is open to everyone. Just go ahead and post your question there and Agent 001 will get back to you with the advice you need.

Addicted!

Hi,
I have just finished the February issue of Digit. The problem is my addiction to Digit. It takes me a whole day to read it from end to end and another day to go through the CDs. Thanks a lot for issues like this and I hope you can keep it up.

SABYASACHI MUSTAFI

Via e-mail

Dear Sabyasachi,
Most of our readers claim that the issues occupy them for days on end. Are you sure that you didn't miss out on some of the magazine?!

Goof Ups

■ Uh oh. We goofed. Although we mentioned The Sleuthhound! Pro 3.2 in the contents page of the February issue of Digit in the software section of the box 'Reviewed this month', we failed to carry it. However, the review is being carried in this issue in Bazaar.

■ Some of our readers have complained that the software .NET Framework SDK included in the Mindware CD does not function correctly. We apologise for the inconvenience caused. This will be carried again in the future.

Notice any goof-ups? Write to goof@jasubhai.com

Send your letters marked 'Readers Letters' to the Digit office:

D-222/2, MIDC, TTC Industrial Estate, Om Sagar Building, Nerul, Navi Mumbai 400 706,

Phone: 022-7629191/9200; Fax: 022-7629224

E-mail: readersletters@jasubhai.com