Ode to a Virus

A computer virus as easy as sin
Is gotten fast, as cheap as gin
It drains time, wracks your nerves
It will make you fall short on reserves
In numbers uncountable, in size small
A virus has one treatment for all
"Badtimes" or "Badtrans", a worm or a Trojan
It likes to wipe your files, maybe even forge 'em

It was just another ordinary day
Morning rituals—shave and check mail
Common habits of every modern male
The air we breathe, the food we eat
The daily clicks—send and delete
Who'd guess that a day can be easily spoiled
By a quiet worm so silently coiled?

I did not expect for my system to fold
Apparently, Norton was little too old
Not only did the bug worm its way into my files
It reset my balance, my emotions, my lifestyle

Repairs are costly, support never helps
I pleaded, I cried, and I whelped

Pacing like a tiger around the dark room
Visualizing all around a descending doom

10 hours later I'm still on "Support"
They come on with "Thank you for being a sport
What can we do? You were so patient...
Virus? Sircam? Oh, but that's so ancient!"

They finally found 12 files, is that better?
What you do next does not really matter,
You must reinstall, no questions asked
Yes, I know, it's a Machiavellian task

"Oh, and by the way, for reinstallation
We won't charge much, and you were so patient.
We respect and keep our clients sane
You see, they never complain."

There's never any reason, no matter who gets hit
Is there any sense in this Web, a virulent pit?
I woke up screaming from this nightmare
Hoping the Web be more than just viruses and software
