

Editorial

Never Judge A Book...

YES, I KNOW it's corny; but just like everything else that sounds hackneyed, this cliché is also very true.

There's a little story behind every detail of Digit, from the planning process to the printing, packaging and finally the dispatch, when it reaches hundreds of cities and towns across India, and abroad. Although we have this tiny little section in Escape called Digit Diary that tries to give you a little insight into our lives here at Digit, that is mostly about the funny stuff that happens every month. However, it's not all fun and games here, and we put in some very serious work to bring out your favourite technology magazine — a lot earlier, over the past few months, I might add.

So what makes this cover so special? Why am I writing about magazine covers, when I could be writing something witty, informative and jargon filled (according to a reader's letter) instead?

After days of looking at options and yet more options for the cover, trying to cram everything possible that's in this issue on to the cover and the packaging, we got nowhere. It wasn't until a quite frustrated publishing director blurted out, "Let's just leave it blank!" that we had our light-bulb moment. Although the idea stems from the frustration of unsuccessfully trying to cram in too much, it's not the reason for our simple cover. Instead it's a reinforcement of our ideology.

The colour white, is generally associated with simplicity, honesty, loyalty, love and inspiration.

As long-term Digit readers will testify, whether it's our language or our visuals, we aim to take the complex world of technology, and simplify it for you every month.

Through our monthly tests, we also aim to cut through all the hype and jargon, and give you honest advice, to help you make the right buying decisions. We also strive to give you as much as we can for your hard-earned money, and promise to do even more in the future.

We wanted to put something clean and uncluttered on the stands, at a time when the norm for magazines seems to be to cover themselves in bling — gaudy colours and in-your-face headings. Let us know what you think, because this is also our way of telling you that we will consistently innovate and change, but remain true to your needs and listen to your suggestions.

After all, it's your love for technology, and for Digit, that has helped us to convincingly thrash any would-be claimants to the number one position that we've consistently held since our launch. It's your letters, feedback on the forum, and obviously the large numbers of you,

Robert Sovereign-Smith, Editor

“it's not what's on covers that matter, but what's between them...”

the silent majority that buys Digit regularly, who inspire us to consistently better ourselves.

In my view, it's not what's on covers that matter, but what's between them, and Digit will continue to serve up the very best content — hot, fresh, and tasty. And yes, as one of the chefs of this delectable buffet, I'm always available at the email address below; so send in any suggestions, brickbats or bouquets about the changes that will happen over the coming months, and I will be sure to respond, and take heed of your thoughts.

A handwritten signature in black ink, which appears to read 'Robert Sovereign-Smith'.

editor@thinkdigit.com