

Mobile warrior's backpack

Wednesday – Inspiration amid Perspiration

It's April, and Mumbai is her usual hot, muggy self. Correction – its hotter than usual this year. My apartment, albeit decent, is on the top floor and the lack of any sort of air-conditioning means my flat has the feel of an oven by the time I get home. Okay – enough griping, I know there are others less fortunate than myself. But try as I might I couldn't shake the feeling that just this once, I needed to get away from the heat.

It's the beginning of the month, we had just finished working on April's issue and being the eleventh hour workers that we are, work for May had not begun. A geek with time to kill is an incurable web crawler. Juggling between posting on forums, moderating our own forum (www.thinkdigit.com/forum) and reading up on the latest hardware, I was also going through a few wallpapers on www.interfacelift.com. Suddenly, I came across a wallpaper of a snow-clad mountainside with the sun setting as a backdrop casting a radiant orange glow across the ice. Maybe it was the heat getting to me, but as weird as this sounds my mind couldn't help drift to the last time I was on vacation, which was just over a year ago. Why not? Serious

Obsessive-compulsive geekism. A vacation
to escape the summer heat. What happened next?
Read on...

CONNECTIONS

