

In touch with ergonomics

After hearing his friend out, Agent decides to take a look at ergonomic devices available. Enough of aches and pains. Time to ease out

Price watch

Looking for accessories or buying a new gadget? Get the latest prices

Photographs: Jiten Gandhi

Must have Streetware

It's no secret that we're Lamington Road regulars, and each one of us has our favourite dealers, but what about all those little guys peddling their wares in makeshift shops? The story's the same wherever in India you are, and you've probably been wondering if any of those interesting looking gadgets are actually worth buying. From lights and fans to USB attachments and more, it's all so tempting isn't it? We decided to do an under Rs. 300 roundup of some of the best and worst stuff out there. Obviously, no one, including the shopkeepers you buy this stuff from will guarantee anything, so make sure you use and test everything before you pay.

Here's our round up of 12 products that you MUST HAVE, some that you just WANT and other that you should AVOID.

Siddharth Parwatay

siddharth.parwatay@thinkdigit.com

Anti-glare scratch guard (Rs. 40)

Well, LCD screens don't really produce all that much of a glare anyway right? Besides, the glue used on this scratch guard is not at all adhesive. It'll keep flapping and won't last a day. Definitely avoid.

Triple fan notebook cooler (Rs. 110)

This product is basically an acrylic sheet with four rubber knobs and three fans. It promises to keep your laptop cool, and we found that it actually doesn't do as bad a job as we thought it would. The fans are powerful enough to cool down your precious hardware. Just plug it into a USB port, and place your notebook on top of it — carefully, because it's not as steady as it looks. The blue LEDs will make your notebook look like an invading alien spaceship, and that's something some of you will love and others will hate, so figure out which, and either run out and get it, or skip to the next product. Since the fans are not shielded, be careful where you put your fingers, and don't even think of putting it on your lap!