

Robot dino stolen

A 1.5m tall walking remote controlled robot dinosaur that was a part of a BBC exhibit was stolen in Mexico

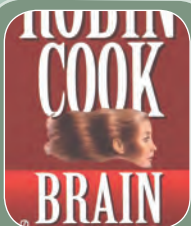

iPhone cyborg app

MIT professor Hugh Herr is famous for creating outrageous lower body prosthetics. His latest experiment involves cybernetic legs that are controlled using an iPhone app

Geek culture: Biotechnology

Biotechnology involves modifying living creatures for human use. Now this is undertaken on a cellular level. There are some scary implications though, and a lot of debate is going on in laws for research, and the products available in the market.

Books

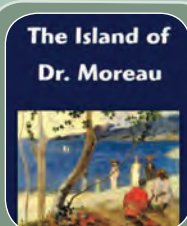

BRAIN

Robin Cook's best selling neurohacking conspiracy, where human brains interface directly with computers.

NEXT

Michael Crichton's thriller explores the legal and social angles of the advent of biotechnology.

THE ISLAND OF DR. MOREAU

This HG Wells classic uncovers the extreme horrors of grafting, but the technology is old-fashioned.

Movies

JURASSIC PARK

This 90s classic shows the danger of cloning and bringing back to life organisms that don't belong to the current era.

EXISTENZ

Features some of the most amusing biotech weapons, including using teeth for the bullets in a gun made of flesh.

DISTRICT 9

A government official discovers the dangers of playing with alien biotechnology, when a part of his body acquires alien DNA.

Games

BIOSHOCK

A rich RPG with loads of mutants and drones, this is THE biopunk game. A sequel is expected this year.

DEUS EX

A cult classic, this game involves upgrading the body with various implants. This is an FPS that has still not aged.

RETURN TO CASTLE WOLFENSTEIN

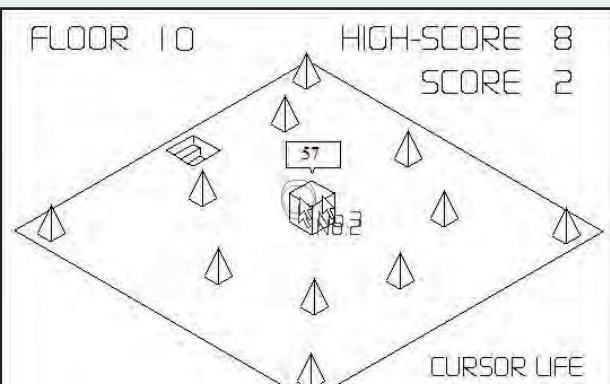

Battle an army of hideous monsters spawned by the Nazis at X-labs.

digitDIARY

This month, the Digit team was plagued by bugs - the real world bloodsucking variety. Mosquitoes were getting so fat that they were just falling off the air drunk. The team went lo-tech in trying to solve the problem. Vijay had an elaborate setup, involving three fans, two aimed at his feet at ground level, and one at his shoulders. Raaabo went all Tintin over them, rolling up his socks over his pants. Rossi and Nash were battling the menace with those electricity raquets, and the steady phat of mosquitoes being fried reminded everyone of Diwali. Michael got out a big tube of repellent cream, but he was mostly left alone because of some other mysterious defences he happened to possess on his person. Aditya tried to repel them with high frequency noises from his computer, but just put the team on edge, without really achieving anything. Siddharth just got frustrated and was attacking them with anything he had, including sticks, which got a little too violent, especially when a mosquito landed on Rossi's head.

Flash Games: Cursor *10

You have 10 possible runs using a cursor, to make it to the 16th level of a building. Each run is tracked by the game, so the ghosts of your previous clicks are essential for you to unlock certain paths that let you navigate to the top. It may be necessary to sacrifice one run just to ensure that the other cursors can make it up faster. It's a game where you co-operate with yourself.

1337sp33k

Stay up to date with internet lingo, so you don't wt? the next time you are chatting with someone

borked: used to describe something that is broken

tweepish: Being embarrassed by something you have fed into your twitter stream

How we unwind

Movies

Avatar: The Swiss must envy the Cheese in the story, but we loved what was done in the CGI department.

Music

This month, the team revisited classics, with RATM's Evil Empire. We suggest snakecharmer.

Game

LEFT 4 DEAD 2: Valve's second iteration in the series, and despite what Rossi says, we really liked it.