the rescue. In a first of its kind initiative, Google and IPL recently announced that YouTube will broadcast 60 matches over 45 days live in the 2010 IPL season through a dedicated channel - www.youtube.com/ipl. According to the contract, Google-owned YouTube shall have the exclusive rights to the online content for two years, with the two companies splitting the revenues from advertising and sponsorship. A fact worth noting is that the deal involves all the countries except the US. So, if you are a cricket fan in US, tough luck! So now you can watch the IPL on the go on your mobile phones or netbooks without having to miss a single moment's cricket mania. Hope your boss is a cricket fan too.

Say you want to get away from a cyberstalker or maybe you want a fresh start. It might actually be able to help you come back with a bang, in a new and improved version of yourself, especially on sites like twitter that don't really care about people registering with fake names.
