

Upside down

A great extension if you want to play a prank on your friends. It'll turn web pages upside down! (<http://bit.ly/6izWR4>)

12 Must-add Chrome Extensions

Those of us from the geekier side of life are quite familiar with improving the functionality of a browser via extensions – thanks to good old Firefox. Chrome added support for extensions post Version 4 and there has been no looking back. Here's a hand picked selection of Chrome extensions that will up your productivity, enhance your browsing experience and let you have some fun too. One of the best things about extensions on Chrome is that you don't even need to restart your browser, so add away.

① Sync Bookmarks - Xmarks

Xmarks used to be (and still is) one of our most favourite Add-ons in Firefox. Now available in Chrome as well, it syncs your bookmarks across any computer and even browser. The extension requires you to have an account with the service. Once set up, it will sync your bookmarks with a cloud based server. To get back your bookmarks in the new browser/computer you're using simply install the extension again and enter your login credentials. We were able to import our bookmarks from Firefox effortlessly. Hopefully the service will survive its eminent demise slated for some time next year.

② Improved scrolling - AutoPager Chrome

Often sites have multiple pages and it gets quite annoying to click next at the bottom, doesn't it? Well even if it doesn't why waste those many precious calories. AutoPager is that

Chrome extension which will save you the trouble by automatically loading the next page of a site inline when you reach the end of the current page for infinite scrolling of content. By default AutoPager works with a ton of sites including Twitter, YouTube and most essentially Google.

③ Improved social networking - Facebook for Google Chrome

Simply put this extension lets you read your Facebook news feed and wall, besides which you can of course post status updates. The beauty of this unofficial extension lies in its simplicity. The extension sits in your Chrome toolbar and shows a number for each unread notification. You have three buttons for each of the feeds.

Facebook for Chrome

④ Painless Tweeting - Chromed Bird

Until the #NewTwitter rollout is completed the web interface of Twitter is nothing to write home about. Till then and perhaps even later, this little birdy that sits in the browser is all you need to fulfill your tweeting needs. It shows up notifications for various types of events such as @ mentions or DMs. These can further be customised. Of course there's the ability to post and a built in URL shortener.

⑤ Lookup stuff instantly - Apture Highlights

<http://bit.ly/bt97yZ>

Even smart guys need to look up a particular word or phrase from time to time. This little extension is a great tool for those err rare occasions when you want to look up anything from the meaning of a word or want to get more info on it on Wikipedia. Simply highlight a phrase to get instant access to Wikipedia, YouTube, Twitter, and more without leaving the page! The Apture in action

Apture in action

⑦ Play music in your browser - Last.fm free music player

<http://bit.ly/cOkj7T>

Being complete music junkies this extension was the most fun discovery for the Digit Team. The extension allows you to play any list of tracks on www.last.fm directly from your browser. The list gets loaded into the extension and you get various play options such as repeat, shuffle and volume control. The reason why it got all of us giggling like giddy little school girls is because ordinarily last.fm gives non-subscribers only a 30 second preview of tracks. The exten-

⑥ Password Management - LastPass

<http://bit.ly/cAUNl4>

LastPass is a rightly named extension. It signifies that once you install this extension it is the last password you will ever have to remember in your life. Additionally LastPass can also help you automatically fill up online forms. We all know how painful filling online forms