

Canon MVx700i

It's a small, small world

This tiny camera fits in your palm, and has an 800 K pixel CCD with 18x optical zoom. Its 2.5-inch LCD helps you keep subjects in the frame. It records on a MiniDV tape, which holds up to 60 minutes of video. The MVx700i connects to a TV via the A/V port, and you can add in a dash of style to your recordings using the 'Effect' button.

Plantronics MX150

The MX150 mobile headset works with only a few Nokia models, such as the 6100, 6610 and the 7250. The Flexigrip rubber grip helps keep the earpiece in place. You can adjust the microphone by 180 degrees and hence, wear the earpiece on either the left or the right ear. A button on the cable lets you receive incoming calls, and gives you the hands-free freedom that you should have with mobiles.

Gainward Hollywood@Home TV2Go TV Tuner

Impresses but drains

This feature-packed TV-tuner card from Gainward connects via a USB 2.0 interface. It accepts composite as well as S-Video inputs. Its versatile remote allows access to all functions, and the TV2GO software lets you edit videos, add effects and burn to a CD or DVD. The quality of the captured content is good, but the device is quite a resource monger.

Canon i9950

The Canon i9905 photo printer has a whopping eight different cartridges, and supports A3 printing. It performs decently too: it prints fast in the draft mode, but is a tad slow in the normal mode. Photo prints are crisp, vivid, have a high contrast and look realistic. A must have for DTP houses.
