People And Events That Grabbed Headlines—For Better Or For Worse

All For Love

Technically, he's a burglar. But his intentions were so benign, you've got to love him! A man in Beijing repeatedly burgled a neighbour's house to repair her computer. The report on the Web site of China's official news agency, Xinhua, said the man also flicked her MP3 player so he could try and repair it.

Police caught him walking out of the neighbour's house with a key to her door, a bra, two photographs and her MP3 player, which he said he was taking to fix.

It was apparently a combination of a crush and a tech-oriented mind. When hauled to court, the man said he was too shy to tell the neighbour about his crush. Of course, he could have simply sent over a technician to her place, but that wouldn't have been as romantic, would it?

Now, A Real "Thumb" Drive!

Check out <http://gadgets.foosfor.se/the-top-10-weirdest-usb-drives-ever/> for pics of the "Top 10 weirdest USB drives ever." We're tending to get jaded these days, with all the news about weird eBay auctions and so forth, but these pics are certain to bring a smile and a snigger to your face!

The page ranks the USB drives in order of weirdness. Several of them look like pieces of various kinds of food, with a USB connector sticking out. There's one shaped like a sake bottle. What the site found weirdest was the Barbie drive—you yank the doll's head off to expose the USB connector. (Has an element of sadism to it, come to think of it.) But what we found the most hilarious was what we call the Actual Thumb Drive—it's a thumb with the connector sticking out! Check out the pics!

Britney Rulez!

More Britney! We might seem to be overdoing it, but hey, we're just reporting here—and if the world is overdoing Britney, we can't do much about it!

Despite having had a baby—in fact, because she had one—Britney Spears is once again the most-searched-for item on the Internet. She didn't release an album of new material in 2005, but the new mother was #1 on Yahoo's annual list of the most searched for. She's topped the list for three of the past four years, having lost out to "American Idol" in 2004.

If you're wondering why Britney keeps popping up, don't ask us—we're as clueless as you are. If you can tell us, though, do write in!

Church Bids On "Sex.eu"

No, this isn't about a church full of perverts. The Dutch Full Gospel Church that bid on "sex.eu" wanted to put up a Web site that would "explain how wonderful sex is when practised in the manner God intended," according to Chris Vermeulen of the church.

The church, Volle Evangelie Gemeente Rehoboth in Eersel, was seconds too late. Divine intervention? It offered several hundred euros for the domain name. And if it had won the bid, it could have meant less people accessing European smut.

The registration period for domain names with the new European Internet extension ".eu" began on December 7. "Sex.eu" was, of course, the most sought-after. There were only 232 applications for the name, which is surprising considering the humongous number of searches that are conducted on the word "sex." The first bidder was Sweden's Yellow Register On Line AB.

So now we're going to get just another Swedish porn site. And no way of knowing how wonderful sex is when practised in the manner God intended.
