Tumblr's founder said in his post that company won't be saying goodbye to its staff and office, and ended up with “Fk yeah”.

Considering the advent of ipads and ultra smartphones, it was necessary to take the console approach in a different direction, not neglecting the gaming aspect of course.

The design of the console and the controller itself is great. I mean there was nothing wrong with the 360 controller (it was better than DS3), and they've done the right thing, improvising on the existing design.

The more emphasis on living room is what making hardcore gamers lose temper, but i don't see a problem with this approach. They are not necessarily following the original wii's plans.

I mean apart from the added (excellent) gesture controls and living room features, this will still have all the hardcore titles. Atleast all major multiplats will definitely show up on the xbox one, and exclusives are already promised.

I kind of liked their approach. Under the hood, its still an x86 based console and will have all the benefits the PS4 has from a pure development standpoint.

I don't think its gonna falter in this department. E3 is going to be a 2 hour conference both for sony and microsoft. Games will take the center stage there.

1. But they did neglect gaming. From this reveal it is not clear whether the new Xbox is a media entertainment device or a gaming console.
2. Fact: I had hand pain for a week after a light 3-hour session on the 360 controller at a friends place. The DS3 gave me no trouble whatsoever. So much for the 360 controller being better...
3. Gesture controls are not revolutionary, and I don't want to look like a living-room loony. Kinect is designed to spy on you. No way does that get my money.
4. Given the fact that certain GPU units are reserved for computation on the Xbox while the PS4 (apparently) has a fully flexible heterogenous pipeline, I think the Xbox will be a little more troublesome to code for than the PS4.

How is Kinect good for PC? No one would like to sit in front of their screen and wave their arms like a turtle.
