

The Positronic Brain

Is Isaac Asimov's vision of the future ever going to turn real? We examine the facts

Community

Check out what our thriving community is upto on facebook and on our forum

Tales of plagues and pestilence

Feeling guilty about the rat we so mercilessly executed (read the diary), we've decide to assuage our (and your) collective consciences by compiling a list of some of the worst plagues in the history of modern man (which isn't much actually)

Obviousitis

Quite obviously, this refers to the trend of stating the obvious. You know, like the above statement. Stating the obvious is getting so obvious in recent times that it has, obviously, started getting on to our nerves quite a bit. This is, obviously, a trend that needs to be stopped. Isn't it patently obvious that something is wrong with this world?

Bieber Fever

We really thought people were more intelligent. That was of course, till one of our interns recognized this one from a picture of its eyes. Ugh. Anyway, it's high time we did something about it and one of those things is to recognize this as a real affliction and deal with it as such. We need to snuff this Fever out at its very root.

Schruteism

Who can forget such gems as "Women are like wolves. If you want a wolf, you have to trap it. Snare it. Then to keep it happy, you have to tame it. Feed it, care for it. Lovingly. The way an animal deserves. And my animal deserves a lot of loving." This is one of those afflictions that deserves to spread. In fact, this should be a religion.

Trailer Trash

An overexuberant fog horn/bugle and some dramatic drumming hardly make for a great movie, but almost all filmmakers seem to be thinking that it'll make for a great trailer. In fact, those very same filmmakers are probably spending more time on the trailer than on their movies anyway. But hey, maybe our short attention spans deserve it!

Bio-Hazard

We're ageing fast, really fast. The average life-span is falling and 20-somethings are now looking like 40-somethings (not us, we don't really work) because of the stress of living. Regardless, just because you look like a 40-something doesn't mean you can write a frickin' biography on your life! You're not already dead. There's so much more you can do with it.

Blogophobia

This phenomenon has been spreading like wildfire for many years and it absolutely must come to a stop. Anyone and everyone is a blogger and a wannabe celebrity but the fact remains, rambling to yourself about how you spent your day is not going to help either you or anyone else. Read more about our thoughts and dreams on our blog at www.thinkdigit.com