

NEW GMAIL INBOX

Google has introduced an easy way to handle your email with a revamped inbox in Gmail. In its new avatar, Gmail inbox provides a hassle-free way to manage, sort and organize your email.

Email inboxes are generally filled with varied email including personal messages, social network updates, newsletters, deals, confirmations, etc. A traditional inbox lists all email together, making it difficult to sort. In the new Gmail inbox, mail is categorised automatically according to type.

This categorisation is done by the addition of various tabs to your inbox. These tabs are: Primary, Social, Promotions and Updates. Your mail, depending on type is automatically added under the respective tabs.

Get the new Gmail Inbox on your desktop

Gmail has already rolled out the new inbox to all its users on all platforms. If you still haven't got it, you can manually activate it in a few easy steps. When you log in to Gmail, click on the Gear icon > Configure Inbox > Save. That's it! You've got the new inbox.

Add more tabs

If you've got the new inbox, you might see only the three tabs Primary, Social and Promotions. In addition to these there are two more tabs namely 'Updates' and 'Forums' for better categorisation of mails. To get them in your inbox click on the Gear icon > Configure Inbox > Check 'Updates' and 'Forums' > Save.

Choose the tabs you want displayed

Suppose you want only selected tabs to appear in the inbox, you can do that as well. The new inbox also allows you to choose tabs selectively. You can select any tab from Primary, Social, Promotions, Updates and Forums to be shown. To do this, click on the Gear icon > Configure Inbox > Check the tab(s) you want > Save.

Move email to a different tab

There are two ways to move an email from one tab to another. Just drag and drop the mail into a different tab or right-click on the mail > Move to tab > Select a tab.

Set certain senders to always appear in a particular tab

Gmail automatically categorises email into their respective tabs, but what if you want to set a certain sender to appear under a particular tab? You can do that. Move an email from that sender to the tab you want it categorized within. A message box will appear asking 'Do this for future messages from [sender's address]?' Hit 'Yes' and you're done! Any email from that sender will always appear in that particular tab.

Include starred mail in Primary

All the starred mails can be made to appear under Primary tab by checking 'Include starred in primary' in the box that appears after clicking on the 'Configure inbox' option.

Switch back to old inbox

If you didn't like the new Gmail inbox, you can switch back to old inbox at any instant. Going back to classic view is very easy. Just uncheck all tabs (except Primary) on the box that shows up after clicking the 'Configure inbox' option located under the Gear icon >.

iOS Move email to a different tab

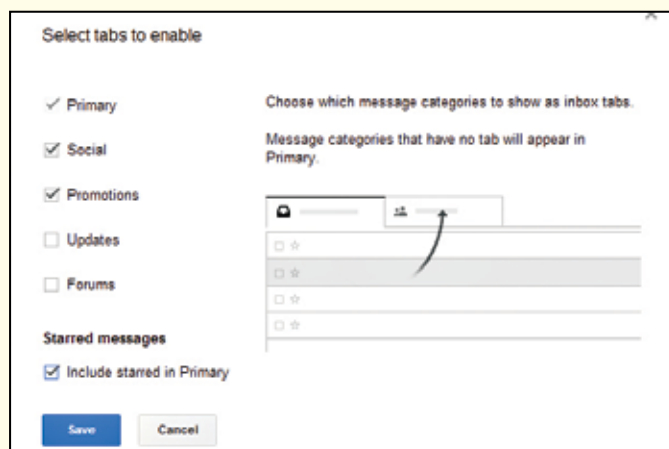

Gmail's native app for iOS has received an update which features the new inbox. Gmail settings done on your desktop are reflected on the mobile platform. The Gmail app only allows you to move mail to other tabs. To do this on your iOS device, Open the mail > Tap the downward facing arrow at the top-right corner of the app > Select 'Move to' > Select a tab.

Get selective mail notification on iOS

The new app update allows selective mail notification. That means you can assign the app to notify you about every incoming mail, only important ones or none of them. To do this, go to Menu > Settings > Choose type > Save.
