

Kickstarter now in Canada

After launching in the UK, Kickstarter will be expanding to Canada later this summer
<http://dgit.in/19Hyo6E>

Digg Reader Launched

The much awaited alternative to the now-defunct Google Reader is now available for download <http://dgit.in/11No2R2>

It's a Deal!

We look at app-trackers that will help you populate your smartphone (or tablet) of choice with the latest apps without spending too much money

Nikhil Pradhan

readersletters@thinkdigit.com

There comes a time in every smartphone owner's life where you just don't have the inclination (or finances) to spend on every single amazing app that's launched for your device. And with the dozens (if not hundreds) of apps that are launched every week, it becomes particularly important for a smartphone user to spend time and money on apps which will actually be used. If you're a smartphone user who'd like to try out the latest and greatest apps but don't want to waste time on apps that will waste yours, check out these free apps that not only tell you which app is worth downloading, but also if an interesting app has gone free or is available at a discount.

Apps Gone Free (iOS)

Size: 20MB

The granddaddy of app curation apps, Apps Gone Free is an essential download for all iOS users. Every night between 10 to 10:30 (IST) the app provides a list of noteworthy apps that have gone free for a short time. In fact, many app developers also tie up with Apps Gone Free to distribute their apps for free in order to popularize the apps.

The app itself has a very simple format with apps arranged in a vertical scrolling list with a small descriptor, the app's actual price and the iTunes user ratings. The app also very clearly states the device for which the app is intended. Clicking on an app takes you to the page with a larger description of the app and screenshots where you can choose to download the app. You can also browse through previous lists where, if you're lucky, you'll spot an app that's still free to download. Apps Gone Free also tags certain apps as 'Hot', if they're popular or 'Bumped', viz a certain app has been recommended enough times by users.

The fantastic thing about Apps Gone Free is that it regularly showcases quality apps that you would have probably overlooked. The people behind the app do a great job of tracking apps. If you have an iDevice, there's absolutely no reason why this app shouldn't be on it.

Apps Fire (iOS)

Size: 14.2MB

If you have Apps Gone Free with its clean interface and daily list of 5-10 apps on one hand, you have Apps Fire, on the other, that has literally hundreds of apps which are currently free, on discount, or just interesting enough to know about. Apps Fire lets you classify its feed into sections such as 'Best Deals Today' or sections with the best deals on apps of different categories such as Gaming or Productivity. Every app is also rated out of 100 by the people behind Apps Fire and this is extremely helpful in deciding whether an app is worth downloading. The app offers absolute freedom in the way you want to view its feed and lets you add dozens of personalized streams for apps belonging to multiple categories.

The app may look like it has gone overboard with its interface, but after using it for a while you'll realise that the interface aids you to browse through dozens of apps quickly. And believe us, once you enter the Apps Fire app, you'll probably spend hours browsing and downloading all the featured apps. One thing that separates Apps Fire from Apps Gone Free is that it also shows you discounted apps and not just free apps. This is a good feature since there are many apps that never go free but do see heavy discounts. Apart from just listing apps, Apps Fire also lets you create wishlists or set price alerts for certain apps. The app also includes an 'App Pulse' section that shows news about popular apps.

If you're addicted to trying out new apps on your iPhone and iPad, Apps Fire will only intensify your addiction and you'll be craving for more, we guarantee. And that's probably a good reason as any to download it.

