Best Apps Market (Android)

Size: 1.17 MB

With the abundance of free apps available for download on Android devices from the Google Play Store, it's surprising to see that there aren't too many high quality app curation apps out there. Fortunately, with an app like Best Apps Market (BAM), you won't really miss out on much. At first glance, BAM may not look like much but beneath the sparse interface lies a powerful recommendation engine that directs you to awesome Android apps. Like the iOS apps above, BAM's team also maintains lists such as the hottest apps on a particular day, the most popular apps ever and apps that will help you customize your Android phone, among many others.

Once inside a list, you can also arrange it according to its price (or lack thereof) and by recency. The app also provides easy access to its exhaustive database of user reviews to help you decide if you'd actually want to download a particular app. The app also has a huge number of specific lists for multiple categories and, in that way, is similar to Apps Fire. Android users should definitely download BAM but be prepared to spend a lot of time using it.

FreApp (Android) Size: 4.22MB

FreApp is another app that combines usability with utility. The main feature of this app (as hinted at by its name) is that it showcases apps that have gone free for the day. Apart from those free apps, FreApp also has a whole bunch of lists and apps arranged according to categories and types. The FreApp team also rates and reviews apps that they recommend to confirm that the entire app is free and not subject to trial conditions. FreApp also boasts of real-time notifications so that if there's a change in pricing for an app or if it has gone free, you'll get to know almost immediately. FreApp also keeps an account of the apps you've already installed on your device and shows you related downloads or any updates by the app makers.

If you want to keep your finger on the pulse of the Play Store, FreApp should serve you well.

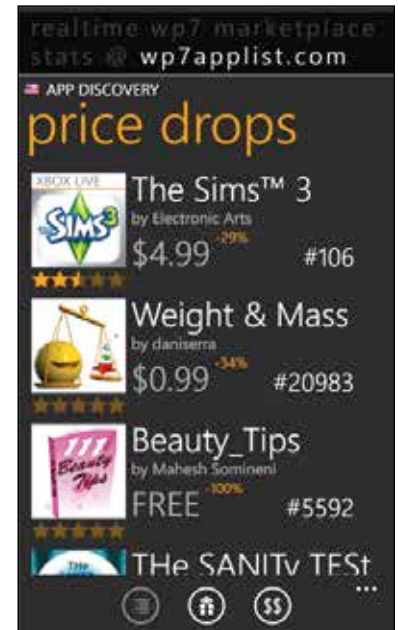

WP7 Applist (Windows Phone 7 & 8)

Size: 1MB

Like we noticed on Android, Windows Phone also doesn't have too many app-trackers that keep a track of app discounts and sales. However, WP7 Applist does a good job of helping you populate your Windows Phone device with interesting apps without spending too much money. The app is powered by the WP7 Applist website, which is an exhaustive directory of all the apps available for Windows Phone. As a result, it serves as one of the best options if you're looking to track app prices and get notified if an interesting app goes free.

Despite its name, the WP7 app works with Windows Phone 8 and keeps a track of all compatible apps. It utilizes an interface that's very similar to the Windows Phone Store with featured app tiles, a powerful in-built search tool and the ability to filter apps by price and ratings. According to the WP7 Applist website, it has a database of almost 130,000 apps out of which about 68% are free. The app also has a Live Tile that you can pin to the start screen of your Windows Phone device. The Live Tile displays a bunch of interesting stats including the number of apps available on the Windows Phone Store, updates available for your apps and the number of apps released over the last day.

If you have a Windows Phone device and want the best and latest apps on it, WP7 Applist will be quite helpful.

Apart from these app-trackers, you can also simply rely on the curated lists present in your app store of choice. Both the Google Play Store and the iOS App Store have app lists that are regularly updated. Most deals or discounts on popular apps also show up regularly on the respective app store's homepage. So, even if you're new to the world of apps, relax, log in to your phone's app store and spend some time browsing through the featured apps. You won't regret it. d
