Polaroid Z2300

Their iconic cameras of old are forever lost in time, but for a new generation Polaroid continues to churn out the goods. The Z2300 is a pocket-friendly camera with a 10MP sensor and an instant photo printer built-in. Equipped with ZINK, the Polaroid Z2300 claims to roll out a photo print in about 30 seconds flat. Apart from a host of connectivity features, the camera comes with 10 sheets of compatible photo paper and a 3-inch LCD screen for viewing images. The camera's light, compact, easy to use and operate – not very expensive either. Will you be taking it on your next trip?

Casio Classic Retro Digital Watch

With everyone and their grandmummy raving about smartwatches, and queuing up to buy one soon, wouldn't it be great to go against the trend to look, well, trendy? That's what we thought of while suggesting the Casio A158W classic retro digital watch. Sporting a stainless steel buckle and a rectangular dial with a miniature digital display, this is a watch that would've been an ideal fit on the wrist of Tommy Vercetti in GTA Vice City. If you think the watch isn't smart enough, think again. It has a calendar, alarm, light and stopwatch features, and it's water resistant up to a depth of 1 metre. So what if it can't pair with your smartphone? It's a watch, for crying out loud. Screw the digital revolution, it's time to bring the '80s back!

Beta Inkless Pen

Imagine getting your hands on a pen or pencil that doesn't rely on timber, ink or graphite and is therefore more eco-sensitive than any pencil you've ever used? Well, that's exactly what the Beta Inkless Pen is. It has a lead tip and feels heavier than most pen or pencils that you might've used, so getting used to it is tricky. However, with an optional anodized aluminium or cherry wood exterior, this is not just a pen but one heckuva style statement. The pen leaves a grey imprint when scribbled on paper and needs no refill as – get this – it has no ink. Fancy writing with a streak of pure oozing metal, anyone?
