

WHO DO YOU TRUST?

How much do you trust the brands whose products you see on store shelves around you?

Siddharth Parwatay
siddharth.parwatay@thinkdigit.com

Hardcore Digit loyalists would probably be doing a double take looking at this page. “Is it that time of the year again?” Well it’s not, but if you’re surprised to see Icons Of Trust appearing again in the same year, we wouldn’t blame

External Storage

With reliable broadband connections and ample amount of free cloud storage available these days one would imagine there would be a drop in interest levels in this category. But even with running the survey a second time it still got one of the most respondents overall. Looks like the data hoarding tendency of consumers isn’t going to go down anytime soon. This year flash-based storage saw a lot of action with high capacity pen drives (100 GB+) becoming more common. This was one of the reasons we’ve included those brands in this category as well.

As for the findings, we weren’t surprised. Seagate is still India’s most trusted external storage brand, with you. So before we go ahead perhaps an explanation is in order. We did our annual IOT survey in March this year covering the whole gamut of product categories that we dabble in. However, while entering the survey online, a colossal error from our side caused a few of the brands to be dropped from the voting list. The categories affected were External Storage and Laptops – both very important for readers as well as the respective brands. As a rectification measure we appealed to you, our readers, to make the effort of taking the surveys again; and for that we thank you. As for those who are still wondering what Icons of Trust is all about, in a nutshell, it’s our attempt at finding out reader sentiment towards a particular brand. By drawing out insights we are helping brands help you better.

How does it work?

Readers fill out a comprehensive survey which asks simple questions such as, “What is the first brand that springs to mind when you think of ‘X’ category of products?”. The questions are clubbed together and help us gauge the brand’s standing in certain sentiment parameters such as:

- Awareness and availability
- Satisfaction and credibility
- Loyalty and quality
- Trust

Once we’ve tallied thousands of responses, we then assign weights to every question appropriately, much like we do for our comparison test findings. The weights have sound logic behind them, for instance perception based on ownership will add proportionately more points to the overall index. A few questions that relate to the brand’s primary avenues of reaching consumers (ads, reviews etc) aren’t scored but help us reach important insights about them. So, without further ado let’s jump straight into the two categories.