

Do e-cigarettes cause cancer?

Now that many regions around the world are planning to go smoke free, e-cigarettes are the only option. Find out if they're safe: <http://dgit.in/1gVfDyq>

Too quiet for comfort?

Looks like there is such a thing as "too quiet". Find out how silence can actually drive you crazy: <http://dgit.in/shhh12>

Latest apps that you must download

A new web browser for the iPad, Zomato gets a complete makeover and TomTom wants to guide you on the next drive around town...

Vishal Mathur

vishal.mathur@thinkdigit.com

Coast by Opera

Till now, the only real web browser options for you on the iPad were the built-in Safari and the downloadable Chrome. However, the makers of the Opera web browser have thrown in the proverbial joker into the pack.

Coast by Opera, the name by which you will find this app in the App Store, is a free-to-download app which pretty much changes things up. The immediate change that you'll notice is in its design philosophy. Websites are treated like apps, rather than as web pages. You swipe right and left to do the "Back" and "Forward" tasks, within a website. By the way your bookmarked websites are displayed in a method very similar to how apps sit in iOS, the design change is clear. You don't open websites in tabs, but as stacks of cards, that can be accessed anytime through an icon on the bottom right of the screen. To close a website, you must swipe up a card. The address bar is on the home screen. The idea is to have the content take up maximum space on the screen. We loved the speed and the way the websites showed up beautifully on the iPad's screen.

However, quite a few times, Coast did freeze and the only option was to force close and reopen the browser. An app worth downloading, if you aren't already using it. The slight compatibility issues will surely be ironed out with future updates.

Zomato v3.0 for iOS

If you haven't been using the Zomato app on your smartphone, you should do it more often. Undoubtedly, one of the best apps you can download if you're a social butterfly with the additional love for good food.

The update brings in a host of new features, including the one-touch access to all restaurants close to your location as well as the ability to search for restaurants based on a cuisine or even a particular dish. The redesign gives the app a much more modern and functional look. Zomato now also has the Featured Content tab, showing Top 25 restaurants, foodie leaderboard and the featured reviews. The one-tap ability to upload a restaurant pic or write a quick review adds to its functionality.

While the visuals throughout the app are of very high quality, most images still look like scans, and you'll need to zoom in more often than not to actually read.

TomTom India navigation for Android

We've often heard about GPS apps for smartphones not being "worth the money", because "Google Maps is more than enough". However, when you really get down to address and landmark search, nothing can match the performance of dedicated navigation apps. TomTom recently updated the app for Android, with new features. The maps on the phone's screen look exactly like they do on a standalone TomTom Via device. Within Delhi, the navigation was very precise. The lane guidance is very useful. However, MapmyIndia's 3D maps honestly look better. A peculiarity we noticed: at certain times rerouting calculation took considerable amount of time, while at other times, it took about a minute at the max. A 20km journey saw the battery drop 14% and the phone became quite warm. All in all, you'll probably be lured into buying this app if you find yourself frequently travelling on unknown roads. If you decide to buy the app regardless, get it for ₹2050 on the Google Play Store.