

Cancellations and refunds

In the event that you do decide to cancel your order, the money will be refunded to you depending on how you paid for the item. However, things get a little tricky if you have ordered stuff using your credit card on EMI. Now when you do use the EMI option, the entire amount gets blocked on your card, with the monthly payments being made to the vendor as per the due dates. In the event of the cancellation, most online marketplaces will not issue a full refund! They will refund your money in the same EMI format. So for example, if you bought ₹60,000 worth of goods from a seller using the 6 month EMI option, followed by cancelling this order; the ₹60,000 will not be refunded to you. You will get ₹10,000 back every month for the next 6 months. It's an utterly stupid policy and in the event that you do cancel an EMI order, insist on having the entire amount refunded immediately. Don't accept things lying down. You might have to make some noise, but we are yet to hear of a case that was turned down.

Aaah! If only shopping online was this convenient

Bad things happen

Sometimes, no matter how cautious you are, you just may end up having a bad experience. It could be a failed delivery, broken product, a seller not honouring the warranty or a Dead on Arrival request etc. Don't let that stop you from shopping online. Think of it this way; just because you got food poisoning from eating at a restaurant, you don't stop eating out altogether. Hell, some people don't even stop eating at that particular restaurant. We strongly recommend you make sure the matter doesn't die down though. Online marketplaces like eBay and Amazon strongly believe in cus-

One PC many USERS, *Savings*TM

PC cost

thin client cost (ML-100)

savings upto 50% in Capital Cost

Corporate

Thin client

model from RDP

model ML-100

ideal to run all and applications

Call for Free DEMO

1800 200 2444

More details visit www.rdpcomputing.in