

DEALS, DEALS, EVERYWHERE!

Buying at full price is for those with deep pockets? Not quite, everyone likes a good deal whether it's a brand new product or a refurbished one. We introduce you to the not so secretive world of deal aggregators.

Whether or not you have any inhibitions regarding online purchases, one thing's for certain – online deals can never be matched by brick-and-mortar retailers. However, for a complete shopping experience you need to have elements of both worlds which would be, one, an abundance of information and reviews. Two, experiencing the look and feel of a product in your own hands. Which is why major brick-and-mortar shops are focusing on improving their digital presence and online retailers and venturing into the physical world. But that's a discussion for another day, our focus here is on three main scenarios here – purchasing from within the country, outside the country and finally video games online. We'd like to warn you right now that most of these web sites send a bucket load of emails everyday so getting a separate email ID is advised. We've featured a few websites which you should go through, though, almost all websites swap content regularly with each other and feature the same deals. After a while it's quite likely that skimming through deals will become part of your morning routine.

Buying from india

There are umpteen number of online shops in India and going through each one of them is counter-productive. By the time you are done going through each and every site you risk missing out on a timed deal. Also, not everyone has the time or the resolve to plow through 20-30 websites just to save a few hundred bucks. So here are a sites you need to go through first, if you don't find a good deal for whatever it is that you are looking for then proceed to the arduous task of scanning each and every site or you could play the waiting game. Buying online from new websites is always a sketchy business, specially when it's a facilitator between multiple retailers, so do take care when dealing with them.
