

on to the Origin bandwagon. Though from a deals perspective Origin did very little. It even went to the extent of raising prices in India which caused quite a huge furor. But all that changed with the Humble Origin Bundle. There has never been a bundle in the history of gaming that could even match up to what EA pulled off with the Humble Bundle.

GOG

If you still reminisce about the great DOS games that you enjoyed as a youngster then GOG is a great platform to check out. What GOG does is that it ports all the classics onto the current OS and removes all traces of DRM. You get 10 free games just for signing up!

GreenManGaming

A relatively new player, GreenManGaming has its own DRM/client called Capsule. What we've seen is that its focus is shifting towards Steam DRM and it has a perpetual 20% off coupon system. What stands out about GMG is that nearly all Indian credit and debit cards work unlike on most other stores.

Desura

Desura is pretty much the equivalent of steam for Indie games, if it is Indie then it must be on Desura. It regularly has good deals on India games and you should definitely go through it.

The deal mantra

Now that you know that platforms for which you need to be looking out for, let's outline a simple sequence which you can follow in order to get the best game deals on the planet. You could always visit each and every site that you come across daily to ensure that you are way ahead of the curve but who on earth has the time to do that? The folks who run these "deals websites," that's who! However, no one person is ever going to attain the status of "Supreme Guru of Deals". Which is why crowd sourced aggregator web sites are the way to go.

Our aim is to whittle down the entire process down to as few web sites as possible and the ones we've featured below should get you on the path to filling up your game library without spending much.

SteamGameSales

This is the one site that has it all, the only downside is that it is limited to Steam only. The first thing you'll notice is the tab, "magic" that uses their own algorithm to points out the best deals on the website at that moment. However, we simply prefer sorting according to the discount percentage and then checking the history. They cover eight websites currently and hopefully we'll see more. Usually games follow a certain pattern and once you view the history chart you'll be able to guess whether a better deal will be out in the near future or not. It's a great way to avoid buyer's remorse. Let's say a certain game is on deal at 50% off, checking the history might tell you that the game went to an all time low of 80%. So it makes sense to wait out a little while and hopefully bag another 80% off deal. The cherry on the cake is the RSS feed.

Amazon Game Downloads

Amazon comes up with some great deals every now and then, sometimes, even better than the ones on Steam. The only issue here is that they are limited to the United States only (sometimes CANADA is included). What you can do is give the address of any of your relatives/friends and get that hurdle out of the way. You don't need a VPN to subvert region based IP blocking. Amazon has deals for all platforms so you should always check the DRM tag to verify which platform the game is for before buying.

Indie Kings: Bundle Tracker

While the above sites focus on individual games this one deals with bundles. Lately, it has even started keeping track of bundles which have been announced but are yet to start. There is no focus on any particular platform here so you can find bundles for Steam, Origin, Desura and even ones without any DRM. We've noticed a slow transition towards tracking individual deals as well but not to the extent that the competition does.

reddit.com/r/gamedeals

Pretty much the one source which is pilaged by all aggregators is this particular sub-reddit. Given that each deal has its own little discussion, you might come across better deals in the comments. Or if any subversive (gaming the system) approach is needed to make good on a deal you'll find the steps here. A word of caution – Steam and other platforms actively ban users who attempt to game the system. So if you've purchased a game which is region limited (specially RUS/CIS limited games) and you do manage to activate it using a VPN then you can expect your account to be limited till you can convince steam to revert your account.

Going through all these websites is somewhat a nine-to-five job, so your best bet is to refer to the entire list of websites once a week or only when you wish to purchase something. Video games on the other hand has a completely different dynamic and the sales have little to do with regional holidays as such. And since it is digital import costs aren't there in the picture so we tend to follow video game deals on somewhat a daily basis. Maybe you should do the same.
