MSI GTX 770 Lightning

The finest GTX 770 we've tested

Price
₹39,500

The GTX 770 lightning is MSI's top of the line GTX 770 and has their Twin Frozr IV custom cooler. The card has a nice design with a full metal shroud over the heatsink. At the back of the card you'll find a small circular cover for MSI's custom GPU power supply module which they call "GPU Reactor". This module lights up when you power on the system giving your PC a cool look from the inside. Since this card comes with a factory over-clocked base clock of 1150MHz instead of the reference 1046MHz, the performance numbers we received peg this as the fastest 770 we've ever received, with Sniper Elite V2 scores at 38fps @ 1080p (max).

QuickHeal Total Security for Android

Powerful and power hungry

Price
₹749

Quickheal's desktop AV suites have always boasted of consistently excellent performance and their Total Security suite for Android is supposed to carry forward that legacy to Android devices. The suite is easy to install and comes with many features that are very functional, but there's nothing we haven't seen before. The suite is also a bit of a resource hog and we noticed up to a 20% drop in our web browsing performance (peacekeeper and futuremark). This is at odds with what we've come to expect from mobile AV suites. On the other hand, this suite seems to be taking the trouble to scan apps as and when they're opened. Scanning options are good.

Logitech G510s

An expensive keyboard

Price
₹9,995

There are tons of gaming keyboards out there and the Logitech G510s stands out for having some frills attached to it. One of which is the configurable LCD panel which can display the system performance, game statistics and a lot of other stuff. With custom RGB colour backlighting, you can assign colours to keys for every profile and by default you get three modes using the mode switch keys. For the discernible RTS/MMORPG gamers, there exist 18 G-keys on the G510s which can be assigned macros per key per profile. The keyboard driver software works like a charm and gaming on it was decent too. At ₹9,995 the Logitech G510s is expensive, granted it has a lot of extra features but it's only a membrane keyboard and none of the features justify its price.

Cygnett Lavish Connect Folio keyboard for iPad

A must-have keyboard

Price
₹7,999

The Cygnett Lavish Folio has a very formal and business-like look and design. The material used is of very good quality and can take a certain amount of abuse without tearing or scratching. The key design and size is on the chunkier side and travel is adequate and assists in precision for good and quick typing. Yes, you will need to get used to the no-spacing design, possibly made that way in order to save space without actually having to make the keys smaller. For once, we get a keyboard that doesn't shirk away from a palmrest. You may claim ignorance to that fact, but the lack of a palmrest is a major hinderance if you are typing out articles for considerable amounts of time at a stretch.
