Digit Diary: The year in review

Time flies when you're having fun and boy did we have a lot of fun this year! So much fun in fact that anything that happened before the last couple of months is nothing more than a hazy memory. For the sake of our (and your) short term memory, here's a roundup of all the cringe-worthy, and also the awesome stuff, we indulged in.

Apocalypse now?

The new year came and went with no Earth-busting meteor, but Robert's amp goes up in smoke and Mithun, to celebrate this new lease on life, finally buys the PC of his dreams. This was also around the time we started on the Nimish Mk.2 program. A process of reconditioning that would bring our happy-go-lucky friend to Digit's level of awesome.

Quakestravaganza

The arrival of Siddhant (the Ant) Sharma to our test labs shakes up the entire heirarchy of Digit's Quake performance charts. Within four months of joining, the Ant manages to beat both Anirudh and Siddharth, one on one. Within seven months of joining he takes on Robert and gives him a run for his money. The force is strong in this one. Very strong.

Intern of the year (former)

April 2013 saw the Ant bag our Intern of the year award. Why mid-year you ask? Well, the hardy young lad was subjected to a most rigorous and strenuous mental workout that would turn an average human-being inside out, and he still came out on top, shaken but unchanged. We will turn this lad into a debonair "man" about town, eventually.

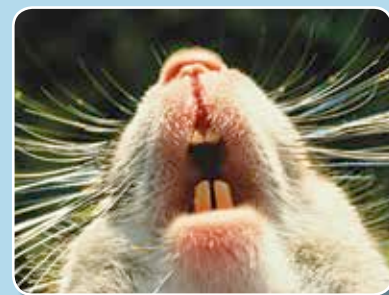

Gunned down

Anirudh's air rifle was (inadvertantly) responsible for a number of casualties in our office. The first was a side panel from Mithun's cabinet (he's very possessive about such things), followed by Nimish's much beloved Penguin and even a swivelling plastic something that our venerable Vijay Bhai liked to do the boogie on. He claims it was exercise.

Data woes

People deal with loss in various ways. Take Anirudh for instance, he accidentally formatted a drive containing 2.4TB and ended up in a state of semi-paralysis for a few moments while his brain re-adjusted itself to the fact that the data was gone. Forever. The Ant on the other hand prefers to wail. A long, low and pitiful wailing that can wake the dead.

Rats. Yes, rats.

It was in July that we discovered them. Beady eyed little devils with terrifying, 3mm teeth, scampering around our office like they owned the place. One even had the audacity to make a pass at Siddharth, a trespass for which it was summarily executed by firing squad. Well, not a squad exactly, but the number of pellets we had to use made up for it.
