

Venus Dust Ring

A new dust ring has been discovered near the orbit of the planet Venus
<http://dgit.in/venusdr>

I <3 PC Gaming

Thomas McDonald talks about why he loves PC Gaming so much. It's heartfelt and to-the-point
<http://dgit.in/pclauv>

Unwind

How we unwind

Zero1Zero winner: Interns

Words are everything, the deadliest of weapons and the strongest of armour. Words, when wielded well, can wreak havoc, but they can also betray you. It was words that took Prakrit, our pony-tailed hero, from mere intern to our Zero1 Zero winner! The Ant was in tears, but we're not sure if they're tears of joy or of sorrow.

Whose line is it anyway?

The original (American) version with Drew Carey had the team in stitches and we were very sad to see the show end. Thankfully, at long last, the show is reborn with Aisha Tyler at the helm and we're glad to say, it seems to have lost none of its early charm. Who's up for a hoedown? Wait! Where's the hoedown?

Intern Enrichment Program

We're getting a bit cranky around here. We've decided to take matters into our own hands and revitalise the younger generation, one intern at a time and the Intern Enrichment Program was born. A tear-down and rebuilding of their mental faculties. We've already started the ground work on our guinea pigs.

digit DIARY

What a month. Seriously, WHAT a month! We've had gadgets oozing out of every nook and cranny of the office. Zero1 can be a hectic time but boy is it a fun time as well. You PC geeks out there, prepare to drool for here's a list of all the awesome gear we received this month. Deep breath, here goes, Intel i7 4960x, the Nvidia 760, 760ti, 780, 780 Amp! edition, 780Ti, Titan, AMD's 270x, 280x and the 290x, high-speed RAM, DIY liquid coolers, super-size cabinets and professional-grade monitors, not to mention a bunch of gaming keyboards and mice, half a dozen headsets and, the pièce de résistance, an OCZ Z-Drive R4 that goes for upwards of ₹10,00,000. Yes you read that right, that's a one followed by six zeroes.

This list doesn't even include the gaming laptops, audio-ophile headphones, tablets, smartphones, SSDs, HDDs and other miscellaneous tech goodies that we've been wading through to find our winners. It's literally like Diwali, Christmas, Black Friday, Steam's Summer Sale, and every other major tech event all rolled into one and we've revelled in it. These ridiculous gadgets have spoilt us silly and as someone once said, "a luxury once sampled becomes a necessity." Gaming without a 780? Unthinkable! Music on a Klipsch s4i? Tchah! It'll be really sad to see them go sniff.

We really must talk about our interns though. Ant's been the reigning champ as Intern of the year for a long time (close to six months) and quite a few interns have come and gone but we never thought he'd lose the crown. Well, we were proven wrong. Prakrit Dhondiyal just wafted into our test labs, pony tail in tow and so effortlessly snatched up our Zero1Zero award for Interns that we were left speechless at first. He's yet to bag "Intern of the year", our other intern is doing his very best to hang on to it, but given enough time, we're sure Prakrit'll manage it. How do we define our winner? With a series of tests of course. We run them through a course of JayWalking followed by mental gymnastics in the form of math questions such as the product of 8.5 and 2 – our interns have struggled with that one, we kid you not – and other questions in a similar fashion.

We also ask them to identify raccoons and poodle moths and engage them in the most esoteric conversations covering everything from basic profit and loss to metaphysics and pop-culture. All interns are then graded on their ability to provide us entertainment in the course of these tests. This ensures that a not-much-fun know-it-all won't win. The reason our Pony won the award is simple, while the Ant has been regaling us with his antics, the Pony has been entertaining us with his theories on the difference between applications and software and other similar tales (Pony Tales we're calling 'em).

While the Pony was whinnying away to the top of the chart, a traitor paid a visit. Not just any traitor, THE Traitor, he-who-will-never-be-named-and-shall-die-in-ignominy-for-abandoning-his-team. We paid him no heed for quite some time that day, even going to the extent of setting up an impromptu story idea meeting (in the middle of the month mind you). Sid however wasn't strong enough. The raised brow, the glittering eye and the mocking smile of his former pal and drinking buddy beckoned. We're keeping an eye on that one, his heart is not in the right place and as you well know, thought-crime is true-crime. It's no different from stealing candy from a kid.

Speaking of the Sid, he's ordered a Nexus 5 for himself, all the way from Umreeka. He was hoping to be one of the first Indians with the phone, but eBay beat him to the punch by putting the device up on sale just two weeks before he was to receive the phone. Bragging rights? Denied!