

as Pinterest and Facebook to receive notifications. Or you can simply share it with people whose mails (notes) and attachments you want to store and refer to later. Use this wisely. You don't want to end up being inundated with spam.

Automate note creation with IFTTT, Zapier or Elasticio

Notes can be automatically created for you via one of these cloud integration services. These saved notes can be your Google calendar event, images and posts from your social media accounts (Facebook, Twitter, Flickr, Instagram, etc) or blog post backups. All you have to do is authorise access to all your respective accounts, and every time there's an update, a note is automatically created in your Evernote. Head over to dgit.in/letsautomatestuff.

Perform highly accurate searches

While recent searches show up when you perform a new search, you're probably aware of Evernote's 'Save Search' feature. 'Refine Search' lets you go a step further and search notes inside notebooks, with tags, dates, attachments and to-do lists. What if we told you that you could perform even more advanced and precise searches?

Refer to the table alongside for the search parameters to use. Note that there must be no space after the colon. For a comprehensive list of more such parameters, head over to dgit.in/helpmeimlost.

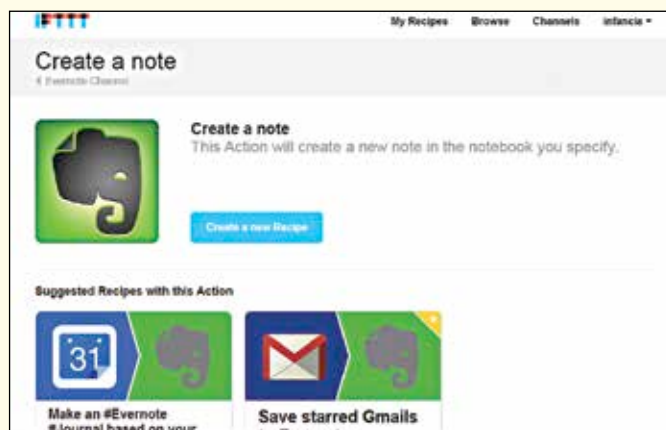

Use keyboard shortcuts

You can customise these shortcuts (see table) under Tools > Options > Hot keys or Application > Options in OS X. For a comprehensive list of shortcuts, go to <http://dgit.in/evershorts> (Windows) or dgit.in/evershorts-mac (Mac).

Create references to other notes

Create a table of contents
Now, let's say you have a notebook containing hundreds of notes. It would be a hassle to look at each of these notes to see its contents. What a waste of time! Avoid this situation by giving your notes proper self-descriptive notes and half your problem is solved right there. Then, for an eagle eye view of all your notes at a glance, a table of contents (ToC) or index would be your saviour.

To create this, click on the notebook for which you want an index. Then, select all your notes (Press [CTRL] for Windows or [CMD] for Mac and click to select). Right-click > Choose 'Copy Note Links' > Create a new note > Paste the copied note links into it. Give the index an appropriate title, set a reminder without a date and you're done. Setting the reminder will ensure that the note is always at the top of your other notes, thus enabling it to serve as a ToC.

Jump between related notes

Alternatively, if you want to jump between related notes, simply select the note you want to jump to. Right-click > Choose 'Copy Note Links' > Go to the note from which you want to jump to the previously selected note > Paste the copied link into it.

Merge multiple notes

If you're like us, you probably use Evernote as a repository to capture all your stray thoughts and ideas on your phone while on the move. Wouldn't it be great if there was a way to somehow combine all those notes into one single note? Here's how to do that. When you have access to your laptop or PC, open your Evernote desktop program. Go to the notebook containing the notes you want to merge. Press and hold the [Shift] key and click to select the notes you want in one note. (For Mac, press [Cmd] + [Shift] + [M]) You'll see a pile of your selected notes on the right-hand side of the interface. Below this are a bunch of options, among which 'Merge' is one. Click it and voila! One note! (no pun intended)
