

Geek Life

Read on to find out the most annoying habits in the digital world.

Google Glass 2?

After pulling the plug from the Explorer Edition of Google Glass, the next version might be coming already <http://dgit.in/GoogGlass2>

Scosche boomBottle

Imagine a bottle-shaped, wireless Bluetooth speaker that can slip inside any bottle cage to help you make your biking excursions musical and melodious? That's essentially what the BoomBottle is – a speaker fitted with two 40mm drivers and a passive subwoofer. Not only can this 8-inch device deliver sound output for up to 10 hours, it can also act as a speakerphone (if you hook it up to your smartphone). The speaker is IPX4 splash-proof. It has dedicated buttons for skipping, pausing and playing songs, and is just a great companion to have if you're going on a long cycling expedition.

Price: ₹8,288

Smart bells and whistles for your bike

BikeSpike

Sure, you secure your bike with a padlock. But what if a thief breaks past that easy barrier? This is where BikeSpike comes to the rescue. Nothing short of a spy gadget, the GPS device hides inside a custom-made bottle cage on your bike, tracking its movements all the time. And with a companion app, you can define custom perimeter ranges or shock sensitivity levels, and be alerted instantly if your bike leaves its pre-designated area or is subjected to severe shocks (both of which are signs of bike theft). It can collect, store and relay all this data in an easy-to-digest manner so that incriminating the culprit is just a piece of cake, once you get hold of your bike. Price: ₹8,227