

Low-res worm

A worm's brain was replicated by programmers and used inside a LEGO Robot.
<http://dgit.in/1dqwt7>

Iron clad Edge

A new version of the Samsung Galaxy S6 Edge with an Iron Man theme is rolling out soon:
<http://dgit.in/1cb5ykY>

How we unwind

Interns galore!

Issue closing wouldn't have been the same without Abhilash and Nishant, a couple of younglings who stumbled into our office and got so enamoured by the gadgets around, that they immediately and unthinkingly signed up for indentured servitude. The Intern Enrichment Program v2.0 begins now. (Muahahahaha!)

High on Coffee

StaticsId spent so much time fussing about his special filter coffee machine that we just had to try it out for ourselves. It didn't take any convincing on our part though and before we knew it, his precious coffee machine had found a place for itself in our kitchen and everyone was savouring the aromatic brew.

Darts

Playing darts is slowly replacing our Quake sessions. So far, Regidi and Mithun are just happy to land a dart on the board, but Big Daddy has almost mastered the art of throwing darts and any match that involves him is just a rush to second. Still, the competition between Sid and Raaabo is fun to watch.

digit DIARY

Drumrolls and trumpets, a fanfare is what we need, and maybe a circus clown as well, for Digit's 14th anniversary issue is out and in your hands (and hopefully, on time)! The anniversary issue, particularly one that involves CTC has us spending more time together as a team than any other month.

Nerves are frayed, our mental make-up slowly disintegrating and sloughing off as stress and sleepless nights eventually take their toll. In the absence of the unparalleled stress-buster that is the Ant, we have to rely on chewing each other's brains out, but we somehow pull through.

The AntMan appears

Speaking of the Ant, the lad's finally become a man in the truest sense of the word. He has fulfilled all the duties that he was set on this world to perform (ALL? ALL.).

How did we find out? Well, he disappeared from office one night and didn't reappear for the next couple of days. When he did return, it was with a new spring in his step and a general air of sedate bonhomie that was absolutely alien to his being. Something was seriously wrong.

What really tipped us off eventually was when he got his arse handed to him in Quake and shrugged off the loss like it was nothing. Half an hour of mental badgering and a car ride was all it took to finally extract the truth out of him.

Depths of Despair

As revelatory and transformative as the Ant's month was, Abhijit's was, if anything, the exact opposite. The poor guy spent the first half of the month arguing with a software provider for DVD content, then had to delay the DVDs waiting for said content. When the DVDs were finally sent for replication, he was accused of sending an infected pen drive.

If that wasn't bad enough, he had left the source files at his home (at least an hour from the office) and had to go running to retrieve the data in the middle of the night.

If that wasn't bad enough, all that effort was wasted. And if even that wasn't bad enough, his phone was stolen while he was making his way to the office a few days later.

A sad, sad month for the poor lad, but to his credit he bore the misfortune like a man. The force is strong in him.

EcstaticSid

Speaking of all things revelatory, Siddharth recently discovered that, apparently, he's spoilt silly. And used to doing things a certain way. Even when it comes to drinking coffee. He HAS to drink coffee from his "special" machine (going so far as to bring it to office), can't sleep on anything but his own pillow and, the most damning of all, Raaabo called him a Prima Donna because of his fussing.