ci-fi films have been adored for generations now, with fantastic releases such as Bladerunner,

Alien, the Star Wars franchise, and more. Of course, there are some not so great releases too that make us question our love for the genre. That makes us wonder, what about the films fated to being benched? Are only of these worth our time of the day and could there be some gems in the hiding here?

Sci-Fi is a genre that uses science-based fictional depictions of various happenings and define the impact on society or individuals. It uses real or imaginary science as a part of its plot or theme.

Coincidentally (or not), sci-fi also happens to be the genre that produces the most number of movies that do not make it to the theatres. It is the genre that has one of the highest budgets and an audience willing to watch because let's be honest here, there is no dearth of ideas for sci-fi films that grip the mind. But the 'Big Idea' can sometimes be difficult to execute and they are not able to make it to the screens.

Here is a list of sci-fi films that never made it to the theaters.

NEUROMANCER

The first film on our list is one such film that could have been great while ideating but never really saw the light of day. This one was by William Gibson and was based on his very own novel, Neuromancer.

They say, keep trying till you succeed and oh boy, did Gibson follow that idiom. Well, he has been trying but unfortunately, hasn't seen success so far. The project remained in the process of acquiring funding and could not even finalise the director as several hands were changed on that front too.

Gibson did come in front of everyone and revealed that Chris Cunningham would have been his first choice for directing the movie. The problem is that hacking is not that easy to capture on tape to make it movie worthy. No one was able to crack the code about how it is to be directed which is why this movie never moved from the shelf. While there are a lot of people looking forward to the film, it seems like they will be left waiting longer because there does not seem to be any update for the film till now.
