

DIGIT REFORGED

It's been a short month. Not that December became any shorter, but after all the work we put into our Zero1 award issue, we're usually fairly light-headed the month after. On that note, for those who wrote in worried about Jayesh after last month's Digit Diary, the Digit search and rescue teams found him soon after the last issue closing. He seems fine, but does seem somewhat jittery when he comes anywhere close to binary code. The oddly shaped hole in the wall has since been replastered.

A Plague Tale

The onset to the new year was punctuated by an onset of communal maladies. The seasonal sickness wave spread through the office, leaving no stone unturned. Even Robert felt the shockwave in Australia. There was a week of people drawing painful flash-backs to COVID times. On the plus side, we were all negative, all around.

Mithun and Manish, who were mostly unscathed by the ongoing pestilence, became the self-appointed moral officers. For those who come in late – Mithun's idea of being cheery usually involves someone else being extremely miserable. Suffice to say, Ali and Prakrit made themselves sufficiently scarce this month, hiding in the slipstream of Mithun's enthusiastic path paved with good intentions.

S1NT on a Mission

Satvik wrapped up the last issue feeling like a new man. He was a lot more headstrong and resolved to live life to the fullest. He even went into a week-long Counter-Strike deep dive trying to secure the 2022 service medal (unsuccessfully, to his dismay). He was well on the road to recovery when he was pulled back into office to close the next issue. We here at Digit believe in shock and awe being a way of life – if you're too tired to realise you're too tired, it'll get cancelled out.

Giving our Deputy Features Editor company, the entire office first gave him company reigniting his passion for CS:GO, then pitched in some overtime to help close the issue on time. Misery loves solidarity.

AUDIO TEST v2.0

As part and parcel of dealing with advancement in tech, we at Digit try to be constantly in tune with (hehe) more reliable ways to test products.

This month Dhriti and Satvik were schooled by a 'Smaart' person on some new software and some very quiet plastic heads. I should stop typing now. Dhriti's ordered everyone to stay quiet.

cricket sound intensifies

"Will someone get those darn crickets?! We're testing here!"

~Dhriti Datta, annoyed
Audio Expert, Team Digit.

Dilli Darbar

After two years of Digital Zero1 Awards, we finally had a live awards ceremony for our performance awards this year. The Mumbai team made its way to Noida for the event, in what turned out to be a rather eventful trip. One of the Mumbai team's most memorable moments was Vikas, our very own

Dhriti Datta

Asst. Editor (Reviews),
Digit