

MegaBoss (known amongst non-gamer civilians as our publisher) giving our reviewers pointed tips on dressing casually for events.

We have a new phone reviewer over in the Noida office – you may have noticed him in some of our recent videos. A strapping young man by the name of Darab Mansoor Ali (not to be confused with our other Ali, though Dhriti does think that they look alike). Darab's been a part of the tech industry for the past five years, working for The Quint, Gadgets 360 and CNN News-18. He likes "fiddling with value assets and understanding upcoming and new ways of compounding." Little-known fact, he also nurses an innate love for sand-

"2048 by 1080."

"No, man. 2160 by 3840!"

Manish Rajesh and Sativik Pandey, discussing
New Year's Resolutions

wiches and has built a reputation as the local sandwich aficionado. And now he's part of the team, as a senior reviewer. Welcome, and bon appetit!

The aftermath of a successful Zero! led to the team dealing with a Pizza overdose. How, you ask? It's simple. We overordered pizzas for the event, which led to the entire team having the Indian-made Italian delicacy for the next two days. Sushant, one of our assistant editors, was observed to be mildly cheesier than usual during this time.

Ali (the camera dude, not the sandwich bro), Satvik and Manish spent a lot of time with Prateek in Delhi, during which true bromance bloomed. Jayesh accidentally walked into his hotel room to find scented candles and what looked like four figures dressed in African tribal attire, sharing a bowl of butter chicken in the midst of latin chants and occult symbols.

Team Photo

Gaming Impact

The team's gaming hit some new heights this month. With the sudden surge in workload led to a general shutdown in our social lives, pushing us into videogames just to cut the tension. Prakrit got drawn into Guild Wars 2. Ali decided to review Need For Speed: Unbound, with some hilarious results (watch out for the review next month!). Dhriti played some more Minecraft. Mithun began playing Diablo Immortal on autopilot.

Manish started November with Persona 5 Royale, and pushed into December with a late entry onto the Genshin Impact bandwagon. He went on to spending days of sleep-deprived hours in the game, and excitedly dragging Prakrit into long sermons about the Gacha Gods and the advantages of converting to Genshinanity.

Amidst the widespread chaos of videogames, Jayesh got a call from Hasbro Gaming early in the month. Being avid readers of the diary, the brand caught wind of our Nerf exploits and sent us a copy of Monopoly: Super Electronic Banking. The Nerf blasters were set aside and the team grouped around a table to potential ruin friendships with a modern version of Monopoly.

There isn't a vocabulary to describe the humiliation that the team of Manish and Ali dished out in one game of Monopoly. Suffice to say, no one's going to bring it up again. Ever.

Butter Chicken Photo Incoming