

Up Up Down Down Left Right Left Right B A Start

The crew of the Digit Test Centre is used to navigating a fairly high calibre of rollercoaster tracks in our monthly schedules. Spelunking between the magazine, video production and product testing, whilst managing a decent work/life balance has become second nature. Even so, the powers that be have a tendency to push limits. The first month of the year is a testament to the fact.

The year did start on a pleasant note. Two of our sort-of-veteran members decided to tie the knot. (For the sake of privacy, let's call them Dhritansh and Maneesha). While some of our senior crew seemed to be quite surprised by the announcement ("Wait, they're marrying each other? I thought they were just getting married at the same time!") In true solidarity, though, the team as a whole wrapped up the January issue of the magazine in record time and promptly announced a simultaneous leave of absence to attend the wedding.

Has anyone spoken to HR?

The wedding was held in a small, sleepy town nearby. We arrived replete with high energy and [REDACTED] affidavit

End of an Era

For all of you who may have noticed, already, but this month's issue has no RSS Feed. There's a good reason for that. Raaabo brought us on to a video call a couple of days after we got back to work with an important announcement. Our fearless leader had decided it was time to move on. As of the 1st of February, 2023, Robert Sovereign-Smith would no longer be the Editor of Digit.

EXHAUSTION CONTROL MEASURES

Back-to-back launches can take a toll on reviewers, making their jobs more fun and confusing at the same time. This month, our phone reviewers dealt with the OnePlus 11 launch, right after a Samsung Unpacked event, followed by iQoo Neo 7 and another Xiaomi flagship on the horizon, all within a week, give or take. Meanwhile, the Digit Test Centre has connected with the SAARC Wizengamot to rent a batch of freshly tinkered Time Turners so our reviewers can timey-wimey through our exhaustive testing process.

Digit Magazine was ushered into existence in 2001 – over 250 issues bearing the blood, sweat and pixels of the team for nearly 23 years. Raaabo's been at the helm of this magazine for 20 of those years, piloting it through
