

(L-R) Abhijit, Prakrit, NPC, Siddharth, Mithun, NPC, Manish, Dhriti, Satvik, Siddhant, Jayesh, Baiju, GM Sean, Ali
GUESS WHICH TWO GOT MARRIED

“We’ll burn that bridge
when we get to it”

~Prakrit

“Jala do, sab kucch.”

~Lord RSS

several redesigns, some game-changing events and at least one known pandemic. What does one say when faced with something as poignant as this? Well... nothing. A team of extremely verbose people spent a lot of time saying nothing, leading to one of the quietest months the office has seen in several years.

We did, however, get an extremely irked call from him a few days later. “B*^#n!$#on, I’m not dead. What’s going on with you guys?” Admittedly, it wasn’t exactly the call to arms that Robert expected, but it did push us into some action. Cut to a Rockyesque ‘Eye of the Tiger’ montage of Mithun shaving a two-week beard, Manish shaking off an acute case of gamer’s elbow and Satvik’s eyes gleaming in the firelight of a tear-stained pillow in flames. Suddenly, we were all back to business.

That being said, to all you folks who wrote in complaining about the delay in this month’s issue – we hope you understand our predicament, and sincerely apologise for the same. Rest assured, we shall soon be back to our regularly scheduled programming.

The Man Comes Around

Once Raaabo had made his exit, management introduced us to his successor. Enter, stage right: Mr Soham Raninga. To long-time readers of Digit magazine, this name may seem familiar.

Soham’s one of our team’s original audiophiles, lives and breathes value-for-money, and is probably the geekiest Guju you’ll ever meet. He’ll be joining the magazine’s Cadre of Columnists with his ‘Last Word’.

THERE ARE DIFFERENT TYPES OF GEEKS