

for a chunk of that time was to join another few thousand reporters from across the world and attend the Mobile World Congress in Barcelona.

There's not much to say here. It was four days of grilling work to get you smartphone buffs some interesting coverage. Show your love by liking/following our social media and continuing your magazine subscriptions. You know, the usual.

Rush B!

If you have been a long time reader of the magazine, then you'd know that there were a few people here as well who got pretty competitive when it came to clicking heads in game. Hours were invested into aim training and perfecting those bunny hops.

“Exaggeration is not clickbait. Misdirection is clickbait.”

~Mithun

However, as time passed the game was lost in our Steam libraries until 'SAINT' came grinning into office. A person who's bio on the website reads that he can eat out brains out when talking about CS:GO, was bound to drag us back into the ruins of Dust 2. And, after much persuasion from him, we also gave in.

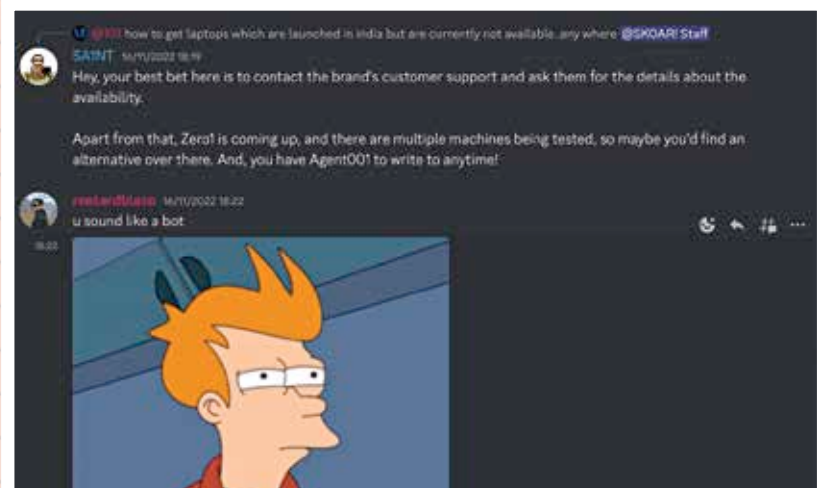

Some being the perfectionist gamers that they are cough TriggerHappy cough were reluctant. But, it was the fanboy persuading us. He did not leave a second without eating our ears out. So, everyone decided to give into his demands and took to the legendary battlegrounds of CS:GO to see if we still got it. Seeing us play, even some of the older folks also joined in. After a bit of rusty rounds, it took no time for the old time champs to get their aim on point and utils dialed in. We did have a fun time. Now that we have played CS:GO with him, we'll make him try games that we love and grind.

Meet the current Digit in-house D&D adventuring party. Email all team name suggestions to editor@skoar.in (Character images generated by AI)

And, when interacting with some readers on the SKOAR! Discord, SAINT was called a bot. He has been sitting around coding something. We don't know. We'll keep you posted. Until next month! d

SAINT - To AI or not AI, that's the question