

Biggest Indian Gaming Myth?

Harsha Malkan

You need to be a gamer to land up a job in the industry. Working in the gaming industry means playing games all day. The most common misconception is that you can't make a career in the gaming industry. "Girls don't like playing video games." It's time to get rid of this age-old myth. The gaming industry is vibrant, inclusive and is filled with so many amazing talents, both men and women.

Christelle D'cruz

Games in India are played by a homogenised, one-note audience. A cursory glance at the most popular games in India on the Google Play Store may suggest that India is largely a hyper-casual market, looking for a quick fix of easy to understand gameplay loops with short play sessions, usually less than 30 minutes. However the player base, which we consider to be a crucial part of the industry, has more nuance than most would give it credit for.

Keerti Singh

Indian users will not spend on in-app purchases inside games and the only way to monetise gamers in India is through ads-however, India is now a booming market for mobile gaming and is expected to reach $5 billion by 2025. Indian gamers will play only casual games, but the top grossing mobile games in India are midcore titles showing that Indian gamers look for deeper engagement in games.

Rashi Chandra

I think that people have this view that Indian game studios only outsource or imitate other games, but there are many cool games made by people here like Raji by Nodding Head Studios, Venba, Possessions by Lucid Labs! I'm very excited to see what's next.

Sana Saiyyada

There are certain segments of people who believe gaming is an addiction and should be avoided. Everything in excess is an addiction, gaming is all about skills, teamwork and an excellent form of entertainment. It is like any other sport.

Saloni Pawar

One of the most popular taboos is that "Gaming is a waste of time". If an individual is determined towards a goal and is consistently working hard for it, gaming can serve so much more.