

Overcoming Negative Behaviour

Kaashvi Hiranandani

Yes of course, I'm certain every woman in this industry has faced their challenges. When it comes to online harassment / discrimination, I've become a lot better at ignoring hate comments. It's very hard to break through any male dominated industry, and oftentimes people will undermine your abilities and strengths simply because you're a woman. But it's very much a prerogative of mine to prove the skeptics wrong!

Like any other male dominated industry, one tends to maybe feel a little misplaced if you happen to be the opposite sex moving bricks with them. But that could happen in any social set-up where there's a gender imbalance. Happens to guys too! You just have to keep proving yourself, which just makes one tougher and better at what they do and that's exactly how I overcame these challenges.

In terms of gaming and looks, I have to deal with lots of harassment: being teased for my appearance, disregarding my gaming skills. As a girl gamer, it was very challenging for me to grow and survive in the community after being trolled or judged by others, but I am blessed to have my parent's support, and my audience too stood by my side in my journey as a Youtuber.

I've had a lot of problems participating in Free Fire tournaments back in the day just because I had an all girls team. But that didn't stop us from winning the 'Free Fire Diwali All Star 2021' tournament.

Yes, I have faced challenges being a female game streamer. Key ones include having access to less opportunities in the ecosystem and lack of female-friendly infrastructure in the competitive scene. For instance, there are very limited bootcamps for female gamers in India.

I wouldn't call it a challenge but yeah I've always competed in male dominated fields and I feel I've achieved a lot of milestones. There are hurdles and haters everywhere but my mindset is pretty strong to neglect everything but my goals.
