

with products like the flagship iQOO 11, Neo 7 and now Z7, delivering premium smartphone experience at all price points that will surely capture consumer interest this year.”

“We are confident that these devices, and the ones that we launch later in the year, designed to offer the best performance to the consumers, and will help us gain the lead in the online segment.”

On Launch Cycle - “Keeping Up With Ever-Growing Smartphone Market”

On the company launching a product every month since the beginning of the year, Mr Marya told us that this is in order to keep up, or in some cases, stay ahead of the curve in a fast-evolving smartphone industry. He also said that the increase in consumer consumption patterns and habits is also noticeable. “Understanding the consumer’s need and consumption patterns, at iQOO, we focus on performance-led innovation to bring meaningful, innovative products and services that meet our evolving consumer’s requirements across price segments.” “We keenly observe, follow and listen to our consumer needs and create unmatched smartphones that provide #FullyLoaded immersive experiences to our consumers.”

Similar Products From iQOO And Vivo Still A Sensitive Topic?

We also asked Marya about the brand’s strategy in terms of similar products launching from iQOO and Vivo. What is the planning and strategy behind such decisions, and how well does the market respond to such similar offerings from the two sister companies? To this, Marya didn’t furnish a response.

Brand Awareness - “Young Brand Has Made A Significant Mark”

When asked about the awareness around the brand, Marya said that it is still a young brand that has made a significant mark in the Indian smartphone space within three years of being in the country. “In no time, the brand has witnessed multiple milestones which itself speaks for its success and love from its consumers.” He further talked about iQOO becoming the fastest-growing smartphone brand in the ₹20,000 to ₹30,000 segment as per CMR, and it is the No 1 brand in customer satisfaction, surpassing big players like Apple and OnePlus, according to the Great Indian Smartphone Survey done by 91Mobiles. “Not just this, some of our smartphones have earned an immense response from the audience which made them the highest-selling 5G smartphones on Amazon within a day of its launch itself,” Marya told us in an emailed response.

He also talked about campaigns that the brand has launched in the country in order to raise awareness. These include a self-aware brand film campaign ‘What’s In A Name’, starring Vijay Deverakonda and Janhvi Kapoor where they are taking a dig at iQOO’s eccentric brand problem - no one gets their name right. The whole concept cements the fact that while the world gets its name wrong, they get one thing right - user satisfaction. Apart from this, Marya also talked about partnerships with esports tournaments, and social contests, and laid out the brand’s plans for the future. “In the future, we will continue to focus on data mining, study consumer’s interests, bring exciting offers, focus on after-sales service, etc. to bring meaningful and innovative products and services that meet our evolving consumer requirements.”

On Future Plans, Possible iQOO Foldable - “Working On Some Interesting Innovations”

We further asked about iQOO’s plans around smartphone innovation and if we will see an iQOO foldable anytime soon. To this, Mr Marya told us that iQOO has seen steady growth and an encouraging response in all circumstances across segments, given the company’s focus on performance-oriented products equipped with industry-leading technological innovations aimed at providing the performance-seeking customers with the best of tech in respective price segments.

“Earlier this year, we launched iQOO 11 - a premium flagship offering that was packed with some of India’s first innovations like V2 Chip, BMW M Motorsport-inspired design with Leatherback finish and more to provide a premium performance experience. iQOO is working on some interesting innovations and we shall reveal the same to you in the coming months.” ■
