Over the last year, we've seen Realme slowly switch focus to the more higher-end segments of the smartphone market, launching a number of devices which have given premium segment phones a good run for their money. However, in doing so, it has thankfully not lost track of its core audience, and still managed to maintain a healthy share in the affordable segment. This has been majorly down to its value for money offerings from the C series of smartphones, that has now gotten a new flag bearer in the Realme C55. At the launch of this device, we got in touch with Madhav Sheth, the CEO realme India, VP, realme and President, realme International, to understand the company's vision behind the Realme C55, expansion of service network in the country, its product strategy for the Indian market and plans for the rest of the year.

Q What's realme's vision for 2023?

A As we embark upon the fifth year of our journey, the year 2023, we have set our sights on taking a great leap forward in all aspects of our business. In 2023, realme has already made a remarkable beginning, setting foot upon a couple of significant milestones. We understand that our customer's satisfaction is of utmost importance, which is why we have always given great importance to their feedback. We have learned that consumers today demand products that not only boast powerful features but are also visually appealing and easy to use. To meet this demand, we are fully committed to incorporating innovative and cutting-edge technology into our products. We strive to provide our users with the latest advancements in the industry, ensuring that they stay ahead of the curve. As this year unfolds, realme has set its sights on selling 20 million smartphones, 7 million of which will be 5G-enabled products. Our portfolio already includes 25 5G-enabled devices, with the promise of new additions to follow in due time. realme's highly anticipated "number series" will undoubtedly take center stage this year, serving as the hero series that customers have been eagerly anticipating. Furthermore, the premium flagship GT series has made an appearance at MWC 2023, featuring new capabilities, including the highly sought technology that customers have appreciated a lot. Meanwhile, the realme C series will feature cameras with higher megapixels, large storage, faster charging capabilities, and premium designs. The company is incredibly excited about the prospect of localizing products to reach a more diverse customer base. At the core of realme's success lies its mainline strategy, which places a strong emphasis on bringing innovative and high-quality products to its customers. At present, realme has a distribution network that spans over 30,000 stores in India. However, we are determined to reach even greater heights, with the goal of expanding our distribution network to an impressive 50,000 stores by the end of 2023. realme has always made customer experience a top priority, and this is reflected in our industry-leading
