CEO Musk steps down from Twitter

Elon Musk has been in the news lately for varied reasons, be it his startup SpaceX launching the first private station or his Tesla having a braking defect in over 1.1 million cars in China. However, as the second richest man in the world the one thing that seized most attention was his recent takeover of Twitter.

Elon Musk acquired Twitter last year in October for a smashing $44 billion and was prompt with changing the management taking over as the CEO of the social media platform. He suggested that he didn't want Twitter to become an echo chamber for hate and divide. And when he found "someone foolish enough to take the job" he would resign as the CEO.

Musk recently put out a tweet that read, "Excited to announce that I've hired a new CEO for X/Twitter. She will be starting in ~6 weeks!" And since this information has circulated like a wildfire, making everyone guess who could be the next CEO of Twitter and how would the platform move further with its mission with Musk's intervention in decision making.

According to Jason Benowitz, senior portfolio manager at CI Roosevelt, Musk's C-level female officers namely; SpaceX's President Gwynne Shotwell and Tesla's Robyn Denholm could be potential Twitter CEOs. In addition, there have been talks about certain names around the organisation and in the market for the role. Comcast NBCUniversal executive Linda Yaccarino, Former Yahoo CEO Marissa Mayer, and Former YouTube CEO Susan Wojcicki who has also been an intricate part of Musk's Neuralink startup.

WhatsApp will let you set username: Will this improve your privacy?

WhatsApp has been continuously rolling out features both for Android as well as iOS, and now this username feature will allow WhatsApp users to select a username for their profile.

Just the way we can select usernames for social media platforms like Instagram, Twitter or Snapchat, the same way now there will be a username for WhatsApp users as well.

The WhatsApp username feature is still under development, and it hasn't even been rolled out to beta users right now. The WhatsApp Android Beta 2.23.11.15 which has been recently released will have this feature eventually. Once it has been tested, it will then be rolled out to other users.

WABetaInfo has released an image of what usernames in WhatsApp might look like. Every username has to be unique, which means no two people can have the same username on WhatsApp. So, let's look into how you can set your username on WhatsApp.

To set a username on WhatsApp, when you open WhatsApp, you can see the three dots menu on the top right corner. Tap on that and then the drop down menu will appear. From the drop down menu, tap on Settings. After you reach settings, then go to profile. In profile you'll get to see profile picture, then name and then username. That is where you can enter your WhatsApp username.

WABetaInfo has shared the image but it isn't clear yet how the username feature on WhatsApp will work. WhatsApp may allow users to communicate using the username instead of revealing their real names for privacy concerns. But, again you can only reach out to someone on WhatsApp, if you have their number. So, privacy concerns don't really cut it.
