

Multi-Gaming

I don't know about the rest of you, but there was a time where I could easily divide my attention between several games. Not at the same time of course, I'm not some kind of gaming whiz. But I could easily jump from one game to another, and then go back to the previous one without any issue. I could pick up right where I left off and it was like I never stopped playing. I could do this with like 4-5 games, and work on them simultaneously. New Assassin's Creed game? Bring it on! Let me just put this run of Mass Effect on hold for a bit. Maybe throw in some Need for Speed and Age of Empires in there, gotta finish all those storylines too. You get the idea.

Nowadays, I find that keeping my interest in anything more than two games at a time is simply impossible. I pretty much have to drop a game to get on a new one.

There are several reasons for this. First, it's the way I play. If I'm playing something, I need to be good at it. Meaning I invest quite a bit of time actually learning the game's mechanics and watching videos and whatnot. I need to do this for every game I play, so naturally, the amount of time I invest into a game is much higher. The second, is time, obviously. I have a lot less time to game nowadays. Ah, to be young and not need to sleep. Then there's also work, bleargh. But I need to fund my gaming somehow, right?

I've noticed that this has in a way affected the way I approach new games. I tend to stray away from games that I know will require a significant amount of time investment, unless, you know, I really want to play it. Which puts me in a bit of dilemma with both Baldur's Gate 3, and Starfield on the way. Did I mention Diablo 4 just launched about a month ago AND the new season is just around the corner. Sigh. I mean, it's a great time to be a gamer but this sucks.

I guess I'll just have to put something on hiatus (most probably my sleep). It's more likely that I'll just drop a game I'm currently playing. At least for the time being.

Thankfully, most of the games I'm looking forward to are single-player games, so I can pick up my "daily-driver" games once I'm through with them. What the rest of you "working class" gamers, how do you manage your game time? Write in and let us know! *

Manish "Trigger-Happy" Rajesh

SKOAR! Overlord feedback@skoar.in

"I have a lot less time to game nowadays. Ah, to be young and not need to sleep. Then there's also work, bleargh."