

■ TWITTER OR X?

Elon Musk

Twitter isn't as popular as it used to be. For real. The microblogging platform has come down to 37th rank in domain ranking according to Domain Name System rankings data from Cloudflare. Besides that, Meta has launched a new microblogging platform, Threads, which competes with Twitter and it has gained 100 million users in just over two days which directly hit Twitter where it hurts most. So why are people leaving Twitter and joining Threads? Is it because of changes on Twitter?

Elon Musk removed the Legacy Verification from Twitter in April 2023 and switched to paid verifications, which didn't get much love from users. Those who are worth the blue tick should also pay for it and those who don't can get their accounts verified very easily now. This has directly attacked the authentication of Twitter.

On the other hand, Meta is also offering paid verifications on Instagram but it hasn't removed the Legacy Verifications yet. Those who got the blue tick because of their content, still have blue tick without paying any dime. Another bad move Elon made on Twitter is that he set a limit for the tweets to unpaid and paid accounts. If you are not paying Twitter for the verification, then you can only read 600 tweets in a day. However, if a user is paying Twitter for the verification, then the limit of tweets in a day is 6000. Musk, recently also changed the branding to X.

Musk clarifies the logic behind the X rebranding of Twitter

Elon Musk says the name Twitter doesn't suit the platform anymore. It was fine when it was about posting text within 140 character limit. However, that's not the case anymore. The platform is more than just text posts. Also, the X-rebranding has been a step in the direction of an everything app.

Musk shares a fondness for the letter X which is evident from the fact that he named his second startup X which later became PayPal. His recent son was also nicknamed X. And the reference to X has popped up in different aspects of his life and business career throughout the years.

Before buying Twitter, he had tweeted his intentions about X.com and building a super-app like the WeChat app in China. So, this new move has been a long-time coming. So, when a user tweeted the list of companies that have gotten renamed, he clarified this isn't just about renaming Twitter. Rather, the X app will be more than a communication platform. It will gain digital payment and wallet services to help you "conduct your entire financial world".

So, like WeChat, X will also be a multi-purpose app, including messaging, social media, and digital payment. Perhaps, it will also bring in features like location sharing, file sharing, games, booking taxis, paying for food, and buying movie tickets, etc. It will be like a one-stop app for most user needs in everyday life. WeChat is very much integrated with the daily life of Chinese people. For X to become so, it will have to have features to attract and engage people. It will also require access to an unfathomable amount of data. However, with such wide scope and proximity to our lives, the app could become a privacy nightmare too.

An advertisement for D-Link ADDON USB wall chargers. It features a large yellow 'X' graphic in the background. In the foreground, there are four white USB wall chargers of different sizes. One is labeled '65W' and has a 'GaN' logo. Another is labeled '33W'. A third is labeled '20W'. The text 'Introducing a range of USB wall chargers that are easy to carry, light weight, and compact.' is written in white. The D-Link logo is visible on each charger. The bottom right corner has the text 'D-Link ADDON Charge with Trust', 'MADE IN INDIA', a QR code, and social media handles for LinkedIn and WhatsApp.

Introducing a range of USB wall chargers that are easy to carry, light weight, and compact.

65W

33W

20W

D-Link

ADDON

Charge with Trust

MADE IN INDIA

in.dlink.com
sales@in.dlink.com