

title of “The Culinary Explorer” among his amused coworkers.

Mustafa's newsroom triumph

Back in the Mumbai office, a fresh face appeared on the scene - Mustafa, the newest addition to the news team. As he walked in on his first day, he was met with curious glances and welcoming smiles. The team had grown accustomed to new faces over time, but Mustafa had a spark that set him apart.

“Wait.. Are you talking about rain or rice?”

~Prakrit

With the grace of a magician wielding a wand, Mustafa seamlessly navigated through the intricacies of the newsroom. His ability to grasp complex concepts at lightning speed left his colleagues awestruck. He transformed mountains of data into captivating stories, captivating the readers and keeping them hooked to their screens. The office witnessed the rise of “The Newsworthy Magician,” and his byline became synonymous with engaging and insightful reporting.

Mustafa's presence breathed new life into the newsroom, fostering a sense of camaraderie among the team. They found themselves eagerly waiting for his next article, not just to learn about current events, but to revel in the magic he weaved with his words.

The flu hits the Mumbai office

Just when the Mumbai office thought they had overcome every challenge, a new adversary sneaked in unannounced

- the flu virus. It started with a faint snuffle here and a throaty cough there, but soon enough, the flu spread like wildfire, claiming one team member after another.

As the flu made its way through the office, it seemed like a bizarre game of tag. The victims took turns going home to recover, leaving behind a slightly diminished but resilient workforce. The office resembled a tissue-strewn battlefield, where sneezes were traded like high-fives.

While the ailing team members recuperated at home, their colleagues at the office rallied together to fill in the gaps. Ravi from Marketing became the makeshift IT guru, and Tanvi from HR donned her apron to ensure there was a steady supply of comforting soups and warm beverages.

The office gremlin, a fictional character conjured up to explain the mysterious flu outbreak, became the subject of amusing tales. The team joked that the gremlin must have been jealous of their camaraderie and decided to play a prank on them.

As the flu subsided and the office regained its usual hustle and bustle, the team shared hearty laughter over their flu-induced escapades. They recounted how they had banded together, supporting one another like a quirky yet endearing family.

A saga of tech, tummy, and tissues

With the closing project completed successfully, the Mumbai office could finally exhale. Dhriti returned from her Korean adventure, sharing tech marvels and culinary delights that made the office feel a little closer to the world beyond their desks.

Satvik's Delhi foodie escapade became a legendary tale, with his colleagues playfully suggesting he consider a career as a food critic. They teased him with mock restaurant reviews and imaginary TV shows starring “Satvik the Street Food Guru.” Satvik took it all in stride, embracing his newfound title with a good-natured grin.

Meanwhile, Mustafa's talents as “The Newsworthy Magician” continued to captivate the team and readers alike. His articles garnered praise and sparked insightful discussions among readers. The newsroom had transformed into a place of inspiration and creativity, where ideas flowed freely, and every voice was valued.

As the flu gradually became a thing of the past, the office gremlin seemed to retreat, perhaps impressed by the team's resilience and camaraderie. The office bulletin board featured a comical sketch of the elusive gremlin, adorned with a tiny flu mask and a caption that read, “Gremlin's Flu Vacation.”

We jumped! Ali jumped the highest!