

occurred one fine day. Jayesh, who had been maintaining a low profile in the office, suddenly resurfaced in full gaming regalia. It all started innocently enough. Jayesh casually mentioned to a few colleagues that he had reinstalled some of his favorite games. It seemed like a casual remark, but those in the know realized something big was about to go down.

“All that wind and I can’t feel anything”

~Manish

As the clock struck lunchtime, Jayesh commandeered an empty gaming rig. The familiar clickety-clack of his mechanical keyboard filled the air, accompanied by the unmistakable sound of gunfire and explosions from his screen. It was game on!

Word spread like wildfire through the office grapevine - BigDaddy was back in action. Everyone gathered around, peeking through the glass walls like spectators at a sporting event. Jayesh was in the zone, his eyes locked onto the screen, his fingers dancing across the keyboard.

In Fortnite, he built towering fortresses with lightning speed, leaving opponents bewildered and outgunned. Dave the Diver saw him plunge into the depths of the virtual ocean, collecting treasure chests with the finesse of a seasoned seafarer. And when he entered the virtual battleground of Counter-Strike, his teammates couldn't help but cheer as he pulled off headshots that seemed almost supernatural.

The nostalgia was palpable. It was as if Jayesh had turned back the clock to the days when gaming marathons were the norm. Colleagues who had never seen him in action were treated to a jaw-dropping display of gaming prowess. They watched in awe as he dominated game after game, a smile of pure joy gracing his face.

The office was abuzz with excitement, and bets were placed on how long Jayesh could maintain this gaming marathon. Some even joked that he had discovered a secret stash of energy drinks hidden in the office. As the day turned into evening, Jayesh showed no signs of slowing down.

His gaming comeback became the hottest topic in the office, and even the flu-ridden colleagues couldn't help but rally behind him, offering virtual support and cheering him on from their homes.

It was a testament to the unifying power of gaming - a shared passion that transcended extremely tight deadlines and illnesses.

As the clock struck midnight, Jayesh finally leaned back in his chair, a triumphant grin on his face. With a sense of accomplishment and a renewed love for gaming, Jayesh packed up his gear and left. The echoes of his epic comeback lingered in the office, reminding everyone that amidst the hectic world of tech, culinary delights, and the occasional flu outbreak, there was always room for a bit of fun and a triumphant return to the virtual battlegrounds. In his heart, he knew that the “BigDaddy” had made a grand comeback, and his keyboard and mouse were his trusty sidekicks once more.

As the office lights dimmed, the virtual worlds Jayesh had conquered remained illuminated in the minds of his colleagues, a reminder that sometimes, all you need is a little gaming magic to brighten up the day.

So, if you ever visit our Mumbai office, keep an eye out for the gaming maestro known as “BigDaddy.”

There's admittedly not much to report on this month, but there's a good reason for that. We are now t-minus one month from diving into the testing for this year's Zerol awards, which would make this the proverbial calm before the storm.

In anticipation of the chaos ahead, the team's chosen this time of the year to take care of non-Digit responsibilities. The Digit Diary over the next two months would probably include a few brain-addled excerpts from sleep-deprived and thoroughly outworked people, so for this, we apologise beforehand.

Until next time! d

We sneaked in a couple of games of Cluedo as well