Low-cost Apple Vision Pro might be cancelled

Apple introduced its mixed-reality headset 'Vision Pro' earlier this year, with an aim to make it available next year. Reports claimed that the tech giant is expected to launch a low-cost version of the Vision Pro headset. However, now, a well-renowned supply chain analyst has said that Apple might have cancelled the low-cost Vision Pro headset plan, and a Vision Pro 2 is expected to launch in 2027. In a Medium post, supply chain analyst Ming-Chi Kuo said, "Apple may have cancelled the low-cost Vision Pro version plan (with market consensus expecting a 2025 launch)."

Kuo also claimed that the Vision Pro shipments in 2024 will be at most 4,00,000–6,00,000 units, which is less than the market expectation of more than 1 million units, according to some component suppliers' maximum production capacity estimates.
