

Gangsta Granny's guide to boss-friendly gaming

A guide to sneaky workplace gaming, from secret folders to typewriter clicks, for a touch of absurdity and amusement.

Gangsta Granny | feedback@digit.in

Yo, yo, yo, it's your girl Gangsta Granny in the house! Now, I know we all gotta grind at work, but who says we can't sprinkle a little gaming magic into those office hours? In this guide, we're gonna get a tad absurd and show you how to game at work without raisin' any eyebrows. These tips are all in good fun, so keep it light and stay professional. Let's dive in, fam!

Step 1: Stealth Mode Selection

First things first, pick a game that won't scream "I'm gaming!" Choose something low-key like Sudoku, Solitaire, or a classic like Minesweeper. Now, make a secret stash for your games, hide 'em in a folder labelled "Important Reports" – they won't suspect a thing! If anyone asks, just say you're brushing up on your critical problem-solving skills.

Step 2: Clickety-Clack Disguise

Invest in a keyboard with keys that won't give away your secret gaming moves. Go for the ones with soft, stealthy keystrokes, like a ninja's footsteps. Or if you wanna get fancy, try an old-school typewriter (if you can find one). That clickity-clack will throw 'em off for sure, and you'll look like you're crafting the next great American novel.

Step 3: The Fake Multitasking Shuffle

Multitasking is the name of the game, baby! Keep a spreadsheet or document open in the background. Every now and then, give it a pretend once-over. Your coworkers will think you're the multitasking king or queen. Be sure to occasionally nod approvingly while looking at the screen. That's the universal sign for "I'm being incredibly productive right now."

Step 4: Conference Room Control Center

Convince the boss to hold meetings in the conference room with a big, shiny table. Sneakily install a mini-game of Pong under the table – voila, instant interactive meetings! Your colleagues will think you're a genius, and every meeting will be a blast. Just remember to keep your paddles under the table and your cool demeanour on top.

Step 5: Desk Drawer Deception

Time for some desk magic! Get
