

acters, anyone? Doom Guy may be classic, but I find him about as interesting as watching paint dry.

Agent001: Come on, Boo-Man! Doom Guy's the embodiment of pure adrenaline and destruction. Plus, he's a legend! Now, Agent 47, he's a master of stealth and precision.

Gangsta Granny: I'm gonna throw in a curveball here, boys. The Mafia series might not have iconic characters like Doom Guy or Agent 47, but those mobsters have a certain charm. Loyalty, betrayal, and a touch of class.

Boo-Man: A touch of class? Granny, they're criminals! But hey, to each their own, I suppose.

Agent001: It's all about the different flavours of gaming, isn't it? Some like it fast-paced and action-packed, like Doom Guy. Others prefer the subtlety and strategy of a character like Agent 47. And then there are those who enjoy the dramatic storytelling of the Mafia series.

Gangsta Granny: That's right, Agent001. Gaming is like a buffet. You can sample a little bit of everything and find what suits your taste.

As the trio continued their debate, it became clear that, despite their differing perspectives, gaming was a realm that had a place for everyone. Whether you were a cynical techie like Boo-Man, an optimistic gadget guru like Agent001, or a hip gaming grandma like Gangsta Granny, the world of pixels and polygons had a little something for everyone.

This will cost you an arm and a leg, Sir! No, I am serious!

In the midst of their quirky discussions, they found common ground—gaming was an evolving universe with absurdities and quirks aplenty. And in that wacky world, each gamer had their favourite character, their unique gaming experiences, and their own perspective to bring to the table.

Gaming has been a space where many find their solace, and as Granny rightly pointed out - "Gaming is like a buffet. You can sample a little bit of everything and find what suits your taste". Now, what you choose, and the way you decide to have it is completely your choice.

Once you are in, there is no turning back. The community has its own quirks, but at the end of the day, it is you who has to make the right choices, maybe infuse it with a bit of love and affection in pursuit of a positive change. It is a world which is ours at the end of the day. Every pixel counts, and if you are a SKOAR! reader, we are sure you will make it count. *
