Threads will soon show view counts on posts

In its quest to catch up with X (formerly Twitter), Meta's Threads has started testing two new features. These features are view counts on posts, and the ability to pin a post to your profile. Instagram head Adam Mosseri made the announcement on Threads, "New tests on Threads. First, we're testing a way to show view counts on Threads posts, to see if it's a helpful measure to understand whether the post is resonating with your community. Second, we're testing a way for you to pin a post to your profile, or pin a reply to your post." Users will be able to pin a post by selecting the "pin to profile" or "pin reply" in the 3-dot menu. Both the experimental features are live now for a small number of users. According to Mosseri, the view counts feature will offer "people a better sense of their reach, and generally more feedback is a good thing."

In our opinion, the feature to view counts on posts and the ability to pin posts to your profile will offer several benefits. The view counts feature will provide users with a metric to identify how many people have seen their content. This can be valuable for content creators and individuals who want to assess the reach and engagement of their posts.

Elon Musk wants to make X one-stop finance platform by 2024

Elon Musk wants to make X as the core of managing all aspects of your financial life. He anticipates those features to be available by the end of next year. This vision aligns with Musk's goal of transforming X into an "everything app." During an all hands call with X employees, Musk said that people will be surprised with "just how powerful it is," reports The Verge. "When I say payments, I actually mean someone's entire financial life," Musk told employees. He further said, "If it involves money. It'll be on our platform. Money or securities or whatever. So, it's not just like send $20 to my friend. I'm talking about, like, you won't need a bank account." <https://bit.ly/46ZATDs>
