T

CL 55T6G QLED TV is a competitively priced TV from a renowned global brand. It is loaded with features like Dolby Vision HDR, 120Hz game accelerator, Dolby Atmos, far-field microphones, and more. Equipped with a QLED display and 56W audio, this TV aims to deliver a comprehensive home entertainment and gaming experience at a reasonable price. But does it live up to these promises? Let's find out in our in-depth review.

DESIGN AND REMOTE

This 55-inch QLED TV has a solid metallic frame and narrow bezels on three sides. The slim plastic strip at the bottom with TCL branding has a chrome finish and uplifts the design without being distracting. The LED indicator underneath does not appear cheap or tacky. Apart from the power-on button, TCL has also added a hardware toggle to disable the microphone on this module. In case you can't locate your remote, you may also use this hard button for essentials like changing channels, adjusting volume, or switching inputs.

The TV comes with plastic feet featuring a metallic finish that convincingly resembles real metal. These feet provide a stable and secure base for the TV.

All ports are positioned on the central rear chassis and are outward-facing. One oddity we noticed was that, unlike all on most Indian TVs, all ports are right-facing, while the power chord is on the left. This doesn't pose any functional disadvantage but is something to keep in mind depending on your home setup. The power cord is detachable which means you will be able to easily replace it if needed. So, overall, the TCL 55T6G QLED TV looks quite appealing.

The TV remote is sleek and quite ergonomic, thanks to the rounded side edges. We like that TCL has included a lot of useful buttons like the Options button to quickly access the quick settings menu to adjust brightness, change picture or sound mode, and more. There are also dedicated keys for Settings, Google

Assistant, and hotkeys to quickly access a few popular apps. On the downside, there are a couple of superfluous extras that can also get confusing. The apps button for instance doesn't take you to the app drawer but opens a TCL service.

PERFORMANCE AND SOFTWARE

Compared to what we usually see in this price segment, navigating the interface on the TCL 55T6G feels smooth if not snappy. The quad-core processor is backed by 2GB RAM and 16GB storage. We still had 11GB free and available after installing popular apps and that assures decent performance in the long run.

The Google TV software is based on Android 11 TV with several added customisations on top. It is mandatory to make a TCL account while setting up the TV and the interface is a little pushy with TCL's own apps and services that most people won't use as frequently. Other than that, TCL has made it simpler to access frequently used options and offers ample customization options within the TV settings.

Google TV ensures perks like smart connectivity via Google Assistant and seamless mirroring from the Google Home app. There are also far-field microphones, and the TV could snappily respond to OK Google prompts hands-free from a normal viewing distance of six to seven feet.

You can also cast videos from your Android phone or Apple iPhone across popular apps like Netflix, YouTube and more. And in situations where your remote goes missing, perhaps hidden under cushions, you can always rely on the virtual option in the Google Home app as a temporary replacement.

SDR PICTURE QUALITY

This TV offers a 4K QLED panel for a very competitive price and we were naturally quite eager to test the picture quality.

To start with, the SDR performance of the TCL 55T6G QLED TV is impressive. The most accurate preset is the 'Movie' preset with a colour temperature close to D65 at 100% white and motion
