

Digit Despairs

Spirits have been a little low, here in the Digit Test Centre. Boo-Man's been down in the dumps – literally. Poor guy went on vacation sometime back and on Day 2, he received an email. The boss of his girlfriend of five years wrote him a rather curt (albeit well-worded) email, telling him that she's ending their relationship. Yes, ladies and germs, she dumped him by email, via proxy.

Our team engaged in some investigative reporting on the side, and found out she's now in a 'situation-ship' with Doo-Doo Man ("Hah! A nom de plume, if I ever saw one!" ~Dhriti).

The betrayal hit our resident contrarian pretty hard. Things look bad, really. The other day, Manish overheard him actually complimenting Apple on its most advanced iPhone yet, and he came running to us, nonplussed. Jayesh has employed the services of Granny and Agent to cheer him up, but even the fart balloon pranks haven't shocked him out of his reverie. NGL, the situation looks dire, and if anyone has any advice on how to bring Boo-Man out of his funk, please drop an email to editor@digit.in. We're all pretty worried.

Fire in the Hole

If Boo-Man's sudden change of character wasn't enough, the Beta Chaser has been in his own funk. After months of chasing Counter-Strike 2, the game finally dropped, but alas! Satvik discovered that the game wasn't releasing on MacOS, and there were no plans of it making it to the platform anytime soon. He now sits and stares at his once-beloved M1 MacBook Air, caught in a flurry of emotions. What is he to do now? Prakrit has tried to cheer him up by introducing him to the pleasures of ArchLinux, but he flicks the mouse in despair, saying, "But what's the point, really?" And goes back to staring at his shiny white laptop in confusion.

To add to all the malaise settling into the atmosphere, Mithun has designated himself "Morale Officer" in the office. We kid you not – we're in dire straits.

The Future looks Zero1

The only sliver of light in these trying times seems to be the upcoming Zero1 awards.

"I'm indifferent in a different way."

~Ali Akbar Merchant

The products are coming in. The test rigs are humming with anticipation. And the team looks forward to a month of sleepless nights and new toys being put through the rigours of their build. There's nothing like a battery of exhaustive tests to drive some life into even the most deadened souls of a tech enthusiast.

Life throws you curveballs all the time. However rocky the track, the rollercoaster keeps going through the motions, looking forward to that one exciting drop that makes people's eyes light up with excitement. And if it ever derails, it's us – the nerds, the grease monkeys, the techies, the gamers – who hang on to the thought of that drop, haul the rollercoaster back on the track, piece by piece, making sure it's ready to jump into action again. Until then, check the quote of the month. d

Satvik Pandey

You newb... Don't know how to CS2?